ICH as the English is in every other branch of literature, it is peculiarly deficient in prose romances of chivalry, a species of composition in which the Portuguese and the French have excelled all other nations. The cause of this deficiency may perhaps be found in our history. At a time when the feelings and fashion of the age tended to produce and encourage such works, and when the master-pieces in this kind were composed, our language had not found its way among the higher classes, and our prose-style in consequence was wholly unformed. We had metrical romances in abundance, because these were in the proper sense of the word popular; they were designed for recital, and all who had ears to hear were fit audience. But for long compositions in prose readers were required, and in those ages reading was a rare accomplishment even in the highest ranks: this is one reason, among others, why poetry has in all countries preceded prose; and in this country French was at that time the language of those for whom books were written. Just as the English tongue acquired a decided prevalence, and had been stampt for immortality by Chaucer, the civil wars began, and the men, without whose patronage literature could make no progress, were engaged in a fierce struggle, not merely for power, but for life. When the long contest between the houses of York and Lancaster was terminated, and the government assumed a settled form under the Tudors, the glory of chivalry was on the wane. The character of war had been changed by the general use of gunpowder; this produced, though somewhat more slowly, a change in its costume; and the intellectual activity of the age was at the same time excited and almost engrossed by the momentous struggle for religious liberty.

II. For the same reasons that during the golden age of chivalry no original compositions of this description were produced among us, no translations were made from the numerous works which had appeared in French. To this circumstance the Morte Arthur is owing: it is a compilation from some of the most esteemed romances of the Round Table. Had the volumes from which it is compiled existed in English, Sir Thomas Malory would not have thought of extracting parts from them, and blending them into one work. This was done at the best possible time: a generation earlier, the language would have retained too much of its Teutonic form; a generation later, and the task of translation would have devolved into the hands of men who performed it as a trade, and equally debased the work which they interpreted, and the language in which they wrote.

III. Much has been written concerning the origin of Romance, as if one nation must necessarily have borrowed its fictions from another. But, in reality, mythological and romantic tales are current among all savages of whom we have any full account: for man has his intellectual as well as his bodily appetites, and these things are the food of his imagination and his faith. They are found wherever there is language and discourse of reason, in other words, wherever there is man. And in similar stages of civilization, or states of society, the fictions of different people will bear a corresponding resemblance, notwithstanding the difference of time and scene. Thus the adventures of Jason and of Theseus differ more from the stories of Knight Errantry in the inferior tone of their morals, than in the character of the incidents themselves; the labours of Hercules are for the most part such as might have been achieved by one of the Twelve Peers, or of the Round Table; some of the Arabian Tales bear the strongest features of chivalrous romance; Rustan might break a spear with Esplandian; and the tale which Herodotus relates of the King of Egypt's treasury and the thieves, might have been found in the Thousand and One Nights, or in the Decameron.

There are indeed particular resemblances which must undeniably be referred to a common origin. Such, for instance, is the main incident in the story of the Stealing of the Veils, which the German Museus has given us as a popular tale in his own country, which appears in Mr. Scott's Supplement to the Arabian Nights' Entertainments, and which Ali Bey, the Spaniard, found as a believed superstition at Fez. Such in the Welsh Hanes Taliesin is the pursuit of Gwion the Little by Ceridwen, which is so like an incident in the Arabian story of the second Calender, that either the one must have been derived from the other, or both (as is most probable) from some unknown source. Such, too, is the tale of a descent into the sea in a house of glass, which is found in Eastern, in Spanish, in Tctonic, and in Cymric romance. Many other such resemblances might be traced, especially in comic stories, and even in popular jests, which found their way from one part of the world to another when there was no intercourse either of war or traffic between the east and west. In what manner then may this intellectual intercourse be explained? Most probably by the dispersion of the Jews. When there were no other travellers, the Jews found no difficulty in travelling everywhere, because they had countrymen established in every part of the civilized or semi-barbarous world. When the European sovereigns first became desirous of opening a trade with India, it was found that their Jewish subjects knew the way. The science of medicine was in their hands; they brought spices and drugs from the east; and perhaps the physician as well as the barber, who was then an inferior member of the same profession, found it desirable to add the art of story-telling to his other accomplishments.

IV. The favourite subjects of Grecian fiction were the Argonautic Expedition, the War of Thebes, and the War of Troy. There was some historical foundation for each of these stories, and upon this foundation a great superstructure of fable was erected. These topics satisfied the Greeks and Romans, so that their epic and dramatic writers contented themselves with drawing from these approved sources. Although we are now weary of such mythological subjects, still it must be acknowledged that there are some not inconsiderable advantages in taking up a popular fable, according to the advice of Horace, and the practice of so many ages. It is especially perceived in dramatic composition: all difficulty of opening the subject, and ushering the different personages of the piece to notice, or, as Mr. Bayes has it, of insinuating the plot, is obviated: the audience come to the representation possessed of that previous knowledge which enables them to take a lively interest from the first scene, and perhaps to derive greater pleasure from watching the development of a well-known story, and observing the skill with which new situations have been invented, new thoughts produced, and new feelings called forth, than from a play of whose constituent parts they should be wholly ignorant: in this case some time elapses before they understand it sufficiently to be interested at all, and then the interest of curiosity becomes the predominant feeling, which it ought not to be. For this reason, rather than for any lack of invention, poets kept to the beaten track as long as classical literature existed. And here one of those resemblances is to be observed, which similar causes have produced. in different ages, and among different people. What the Theban and the Trojan wars were to the ancient writers, the histories of Charlemagne and Arthur were to the poets and romancers of the middle ages.

V. A gratuitous assertion has been hazarded by M. de Caylus, that the fables of the Round Table were invented by a jealous spirit of national rivalry, in imitation of those of Charlemagne. "The English," says he, "would not yield to us in heroical fictions: they opposed one of their heroes to ours, and a British to a French chivalry. Things went even farther than this. The French pretended to derive their origin from Francus and from Hector: the English chose to be descended from Brutus, son of Ascanius, (of Silvius he should have said), and grandson of Æneas. The pretended history of Jeffery of Monmouth established this filiation. Thus with regard to antiquity things became equal between us; and the choice which they made of Arthur for their hero in the middle ages, gave them the advantage over us of about two centuries in priority, so that the reign of Charlemagne became but a copy of his. Yet as the fabulous history of Charlemagne is the eldest, the imitation in the others is ill disguised. Arthur and Charlemagne have each a nephew of great prowess, whom they love above all other men; Roland and Gawain play the same part. No person is ignorant of the numerous wars which Charlemagne had to support; Arthur, being as great a warrior, was engaged in twelve. Both fought with the Pagans; both fought with the Saxons; both made a great many journeys; each was equally generous in distributing his spoils among his chiefs.
Charlemagne was sober, his table was frugal: he only admitted his friends and the chief persons of his kingdom to it on solemn festivals.
Arthur observed exactly the same conduct. The twelve peers of the one correspond to the twelve knights of the other's Round Table.
Thus then it is highly probable that the whole history of Arthur has been formed upon that of Charlemagne, and that the reign of this latter prince has been the source of all the romantic ideas which were so prolific in the succeeding ages."

This is written neither with accuracy, nor with judgement. The resemblances which are indicated are like those between Monmouth and Macedon; Charlemagne was a king, and so was Arthur, and they each had a nephew, but wherein the resemblance lies in the two kings, except in their sovereignty, or between Gawain and Roland, except in their relationship to the respective monarchs, it requires the aid of an hypothesis to discover. In reality, there existed no such rivalry, as the hypothesis premises, between the two nations at that time; that rivalry had not yet begun, nor does national rivalry display itself in such things. It can scarcely be necessary to observe, that this is no question of national literature. The books of the Round Table, whether written by Normans, Bretons, or natives of any other province, belong equally to France; they are the pride of French literature; nor have we any thing which can be placed in competition with them.

VI. M. Ginguené assigns to the Romances of the Paladines a great superiority over those of the Round Table. "It cannot be denied," he says, "that the Twelve Peers of Charlemagne, armed to deliver France and Europe from the tyranny of the Saracens, are more interesting than the Knights of Arthur seeking the St. Greall, encountering, in obtaining it, the most perilous adventures, and finishing by turning monks or hermits. It is true, that if the labours of the Knights of the Round Table and those of the Twelve Peers have little similarity in their object, the knights of the two orders resemble each other greatly in their valour, their gallantry, and their exploits; and that the first authors of these romances have almost equally introduced the wonders of fairy machinery, and the interest of love-episodes. But the fable of Charlemagne must have attracted the imagination of the Italians much more powerfully than that of Arthur, since, knowing them both in old translations, they employed themselves upon Charlemagne and Roland, long before they took up Lancelot, Gyron the Courteous, and some other heroes of the Round Table. Roland, and the other Paladines, became national, or at least popular, in Italy as much as they were in France itself; and when at last he was celebrated by the great Ariosto,—when the Homer of Ferrara had united to all the charms of romantic fiction the nobleness and the splendour of the epic trumpet, the name of Roland had nothing then for which to envy that of Achilles.”

Undoubtedly it is true that no poem of any lasting popularity has been produced upon a Round Table story; and that in its kind the Orlando Furioso will hardly be equalled, and cannot be surpassed.
But the cause why Charlemagne and his Peerage should be more popular in the south of Europe than King Arthur is obvious: it is owing to the historical and local celebrity of the founder of the Western Empire; to the notoriety of his existence, and the importance of his reign,—not to any greater charm in the fictions which were engrafted upon it.

VII. “As to Arthur,” says Milton, “more renowned in songs and romances than in true stories, who he was, and whether ever any such reigned in Britain, hath been doubted heretofore, and may again with good reason. No less is in doubt who was his father,—and as we doubted of his parentage, so may we also of his puissance. Considering all things,” he adds, “there will remain neither place nor circumstance in story which may administer any likelihood of those great acts that are ascribed him.”—His own countrymen go farther in their scepticism. Mr. Owen says, there ought not to be any doubt that there was a prince of this name, for he is mentioned by Llywar, Merddin, and Taliesin, who were his contemporaries, and he is recorded in the Triads: but the Arthur of romance, according to him, is a mythological person. "Arthur," he says, "is the Great Bear, as the epithet literally implies: (it is odd that he did not think of Arctos and Arcturus to strengthen his hypothesis): and perhaps this constellation, being so near the pole, and visibly describing a circle in a small space, is the origin of the famous Round Table.
Telyn Arthur, or the Harp of Arthur, is also the British appellation for the beautiful constellation Lyra. Uthyr Bendragon, or Wonder the Supreme Leader, and Eigyr, or Generating Power, were the parents of the mythological, not the real Arthur, who was the son of Meirig ab Tewdrig. In some of the Welsh stories concerning him we recognize adventures which must have had a common origin with those of Hercules, and with the Argonautic voyage. It may not be amiss," he adds, "to glance into the gloomy region where the Arthur of mythology is concealed, so as to catch in his features an identity with some celebrated name recorded in the history of the primitive world. In so doing, are we mistaken or not, in recognizing him as Nimrod, the mighty hunter before the Lord, the presumptuous Belus?
We can see but indistinctly here, and therefore may have erred: may others prove more fortunate."

Mr. Davies, who is certainly far the most able writer that has yet attempted to explore the dark region of Welsh antiquity, concurs in all this, except in identifying Arthur with Nimrod. He will have him "only another representation of the polyonymous patriarch—the deified Noah;" and the monuments which bear his name in so many parts of the island, he supposes to be remnants of Arkite worship.
Mr. Davies is often elaborately fanciful in his explanations, and sees every thing through the haze of theory; but his volumes contain a great deal of valuable research, his views are clear and consistent, and his inferences are frequently acute, and sometimes convincing. He has proved satisfactorily that the Welsh bards adhered to the Druidical superstition long after the establishment of Christianity; and he has adduced strong grounds, at least, for supposing that the Arthur of history was initiated in the same faith. But with regard to any mythological personage from whom the real Arthur derived his name, and the romantic one many of his adventures, farther evidence must be required. Whether the Mabinogion will supply it I am very doubtful. The specimens which I have seen lead me to no such conclusion; they are, however, exceedingly curious, nor is there a greater desideratum in British literature than an edition of these tales, with a literal version, and such comments as Mr. Davies, of all men, is best qualified to give. Certain it is that many of the Round Table fictions originated in Wales, or in Bretagne, and probably might still be traced there.

VIII. All which can be gleaned from Welsh authorities, respecting the real actions of Arthur, may be found in Mr. Turner's(elaborate and most valuable history of the Anglo-Saxons: it is sufficient to prove that he made a brave stand against the Saxons, though not always a successful one, and that he was sometimes engaged in destructive wars with the petty princes of his own country. To trace the fictions to which he has given birth, would be a work of extraordinary labour and difficulty,—greater, perhaps, than any individual could accomplish. Many of the oldest works have never been published, and some, perhaps, are no longer in existence. The printed romances are of extreme rarity, and their bulk is such that they cannot be perused without a serious expence of time, more than commensurate with the importance of the object. Such, however, as I have been able to obtain, I have gone through, and among them are the most important of those from which the Morte Arthur has been compiled.

IX. Merlin is the first of these in order. I am indebted to Mr. Laing for the use of a copy in his rich collection, in two volumes, foolscap quarto, with a third, containing the Prophecies.
Sensuyl le premier volume de Merlin. Qui est le premier livre de la Table ronde. Avec plusieurs choses moulte recreative. Nouvellement imprime a Paris en la grant Rue saint Jacques a Lenseigne de la Roze blanche Couronnee.

This romance begins with a bold fiction bordering upon impiety, though assuredly it was not invented with any irreligious intention. The author pretends that the Devils held a council in consequence of the diminution which their power on earth had sustained since the Incarnation: the result of their deliberations was, a resolution that the best way to oppose the power of God in the world, would be to produce an incarnation of the Devil. A fiend accordingly volunteered for this service; but by a strange mistake, for one of his subtlety, he chose a religious damsel for the subject of the experiment; and she, by her prayers and penitence, sanctified the child, of which she had innocently and unwittingly conceived. As soon as young Merlin had saved his mother from the punishment to which she was condemned, he desired her confessor, the holy man Blaise, to write down his history, and whatever else he should tell him; upon which Blaise adjured him in the most solemn manner not to deceive him, or make him do any thing but what would please God. Merlin satisfies him upon this score, and tells him that all people will gladly hear his book, but that it will not be of authority, inasmuch as he is not one of the Apostles. Blaise is thus made Historiographer to the great Prophet and Enchanter, who with becoming regard to the information of posterity, supplies him from time to time with the most unquestionable materials. As soon as any thing remarkable has happened, away posts Merlin to Northumberland, and communicates it to his veracious chronicler.

The style of fiction with which this romance begins might induce an expectation of something better than what follows; but, in reality, it is one of the poorest books of the Round Table. There is the history of Arthur’s birth, and the wars of his father Uther. Uther and Pendragon are made two persons in this book, brothers; and Pendragon is slain in a battle upon Salisbury plain, where the river Thames flows by the city of Salisbury. This battle was fought against the Saxons, who were Saracens, and made strong war in those days upon Britain, under their Kings Hardagabran, Pignorez, Magloras, and Gaudoules: the daughter of the Saxon Hangius had converted Vertigiers to the Law Mahom, and was the first person who called the people garçons. After the death of Uther, the kings who had done homage to him refuse to acknowledge Arthur, notwithstanding a miracle has designated him to be their lawful sovereign. This occasioned a series of tiresome wars, till the Saxons return and give these princes sufficient business at home. Merlin then sends for King Ban of Benoic, and King Boors of Gennes, to go with Arthur, and assist King Leodagan against the Irish King Ryon, famous for his mantle made of kings' beards. While he is busy in successfully terminating this war, the Saxons lay his own kingdom waste; but it is defended by some half-score of his nephews, with Gawain at their head, who have luckily all left home with one accord for the sake of receiving knighthood from their uncle's hands. Meantime King Claudas, the old enemy of King Ban and his brother Boors, had applied for aid to Julius Caesar, Emperor of Rome. Mais ce n'estoit pas ce Julius Caesar que le chevalier Mars occist en son pavillon au royaume de Perse, mais fut celuy que messire Gawain occist en la bataille dessoubz Langres pour ce que celuy Julius avoit deflie le roy Artus. The one Julius Caesar has evidently been mistaken for Julian; as for the other, it may well be supposed that the aid of Arthur and all his chivalry was required against so formidable a personage.

Le second volume de Merlin.

On les vont a Regnes chiez Jehan Mace, a Caen chiez Michel Angier, a Rouen chiez Richard Mace aux cinq chapeletz pres la grant eglise. This Richard Mace was the printer.

Here we have the war against Claudas and the Emperor of Borne, in behalf of King Ban and King Boors, the marriage of Arthur with King Leodagan’s legitimate daughter Guenever; the reconciliation between Arthur and his brother-in-law King Lott; the destruction of the Saxons; another war against that cruel shaver King Ryon of Ireland, who is now slain by Arthur; the defeat of the Romans, with the death of their Emperor Julius Cesar; and, finally, Merlin’s disappearance, being the fatal termination of his amours with the nymph Vivian. The first books of the Morte Arthur draw largely from this romance, which has evidently been derived from the same original as the metrical romance analysed by Mr. Ellis.

X. As the Prophecies of Merlin are usually sought for to accompany the Romance, it may be proper to notice them here. The title and colophon are as follow:

Les Prophecies de Merlin. On les vent a Regnes chiez Jehan Mace, a Caen chiez Michel Angier, a Rouen chiez Richard Mace, aux cinq chapelets pres la grant eglise.

Cy fiment les propheties de Merlin, nouvellement imprimees a Rouen, pour Jehan Mace, demourant a Regnes pres Saint Sauveur a lymage Saint Jehan levangeliste. Et pour Michel Angier demou-rant a Caen pres le pont Saint Pierre, et pour Richard Mace demourant a Rouen joust le portail aux libraires a lenseigne des cinq chapelets.

This book is put together in extraordinary confusion. It seems almost as if the chapters had been written separately, and printed according to the accidental arrangement in which they were found.
There is not the slightest resemblance to the predictions recorded by Jeffery of Monmouth,—the present strange compilation is much more amusing, and much more curious. Merlin, like Frey Luys d’Escobar, answers all questions respecting this world and the next; points of natural history as well as of theology and prophecy are introduced; and occasional fragments of romance, including a considerable part of Merlin's own history, by no means according with the account given by the holy Blaise his chronicler, make up the odd medley. In one place it is said, _celuy compte est translate de Latin en François_; in another, _le compte dit et si le grant livre le temoigne_; and these expressions seem not to be a mere form of fiction, but real references to an earlier work. It has evidently been written at very different times, and, of course, with very different purposes in the persons who availed themselves of Merlin's name to give their own opinions currency, or answer their own ends,—a fraud which was frequently practised in the middle ages. Many parts have a political bearing, which is now no longer explicable, unless the occasion for which they were composed could be ascertained. Many other places touch upon the corruption of the church, and the venality of the clergy: Merlin says, _noster Seigneur Jhesu Crist souffrit que je nasquisse au siecle, pour la honte des ennemys desenfer, mesmement pour complez au siecle le mauvais miracle du Dragon de Babilone, que nul saint nen a parole fors seullement monseigneur saint Jehan._ p. 54. There are frequent allusions of this kind, in the spirit of an enemy to the Romish church; and yet in other places the Albigenses seem to be alluded to as a race worse than the Saracens.

According to this book Master Tholomer was the first person whom Merlin employed to write his predictions; and when he was made a bishop, and it was no longer fitting that he should be thus engaged, one of his clerks, by name Master Anthoine, succeeded to the office of Propheciographer. This personage had a most profound respect for Merlin. _Je voy clerement, dict Maistre Anthoine, que tu es le plus subtil homme qui oncques fut au siecle, si ne fut nostre seigneur Jhesu Crist._ p. 49. A third great reporter was Meliades, brother of Sir Tristram; he was the paramour of the Lady of the Lake, and used to converse with Merlin in his tomb. The Sage Clerk Raymon was also a writer of these Prophecies. He was a very remarkable personage, who travelled through the air, over land and ses, upon a huge stone, having a devil in its centre, like the kernel of a nut. This devil was the unlucky fiend who had Merlin for his son; and it is to his credit that he speaks well of a son so unlike himself and all his father's family: The Son of Mary, he says, permitted Merlin to be born of that strange generation in order to deceive Lucifer and those of his council: "and know," he continues, "that if luxury had not overtaken him, neither Peter, nor Paul, nor James, nor any other of the Apostles, would have done so much good as he would have done in the world. Nevertheless, so much he did, that I know of a certainty he is not damned, but is out of the power of Lucifer." The Sage Clerk Raymon of Wales was succeeded in his office by Rubere the Chaplain.

XI. A much larger portion of the Morte Arthur is taken from Lancelot du Lac than from Merlin.

Le Roman du vaillant Lancelot du Lac, Chevalier de la Table Ronde; translété du latin en françoise, par Robert de Borron, ou de Bourron. Paris, Verard, 1494. 3 Vol. in fol. gotiq.

Cy fine le dernier volume de la table ronde faisant mention des faits et process de moseigneur Lancelot du Lac, etc. imprime a Paris ce derrenier iour dapuril mil cccc quatre vingts et quatorze pour Anthoine Verard. 3 Vol. in f. goth.

This is the bulkiest of all the Round Table Romances, but it is also one of the best; and the hero might be considered as the ideal of a perfect Knight for honour, generosity, and constancy, as well as courage, if it could be forgotten that he lives in adultery with the wife of the King whom he serves, and who regards him as one of the best and most faithful of his court. The lamentation over Sir Lancelot's dead body, toward the close of the Morte Arthur, which has often been quoted for its beauty, is translated from this Romance.

XII. Sir Thomas Malory has also drawn liberally from the following romance.
XV

Histoire du tres-vaillant, noble et excellent chevalier Tristan; fils du Roi Méliadus de Léonnois (rédigée par Luce, chevalier, seigneur du château de Gast.)—Imprimé à Paris pour Anthoine Verard, 2 tom. en 1 Vol. in fol. goth. (sans date.)

Cy finit le seconde & le dernier volume fait & copié en l’honneur & memoire du tres vaillat noble et excellent chevalier Tristan fils du noble roy meliadus de leonoys. Imprime a Paris pour Anthoine Verard libraire demeurant pres le pont nostre dame a lenseigne Saint Jehan levangeliste ou au palais au premier pillier devant la chappelle ou on chante la messe de messeigneurs de parlement.

The history of this romance has been investigated by Mr. Walter Scott, in his edition of Thomas of Ercildoune's poem, with his usual ability and erudition, leaving nothing undone. That it is originally British appears certain. Mr. Davies, indeed, endeavours to show that the story is allegorical mythology, and Tristram himself (or Trystan, according to the Cymric orthography of the name) a mythological character,—but this is the utmost wildness of hypothesis.

I began the perusal of this, as being the most celebrated of all these romances, with great expectations; those expectations were not answered: the story in its progress not only disappointed, but frequently disgusted me. Vile as the thought is of producing by a philtre that love upon which the whole history turns, and making the hero, or rather both the heroes, live in adultery (and that too in both instances of an aggravated kind), these are the conditions of the Romance, which must be taken with it for better for worse: they are the original elements, of which the author was to make the best he could. But it is the fault of the author that so many of the leading incidents should shock, not merely our ordinary morals, which are conventional and belong to our age, but those feelings which belong to human nature in all ages. The characters also are in many instances discordant with themselves; and the fault, so frequent in such books, of degrading one hero to enhance the fame of another, is carried here to great excess. An author may do what he will with the creatures of his own creation,—they are as clay in the potter's hand,—but it is a foul offence in literature to take up the personage whom another writer has described as a Knight of prowess and of worth, and engraft vices upon him, and stain him with dishonour. Who could bear to see Desdemona represented as an adultress?

XIII. The Romance of Meliadus de Leonnoys, the father of Tristram, is, in my judgement, very superior to that of the son.

Amen.

Le present volume des faitz & gestes du noble roy Méliadus de Léonnoys fut acheué d'imprimer a Paris le xx jour du moys de Mars Lan mil cinq cens xxxii.

The author of the Brut professes to have composed, or recompiled this volume, at the request of King Henry of England, from the Latin, in which it had been rudely and confusedly written by Master Rusticien de Pise, at the desire of an English King Edward. I do not believe that any of these Romances ever existed in Latin,—by whom, or for whom, could they have been written in that language? Nor would it be worth while to guess what Kings are intended, when the patrons may be as imaginary as the originals. Unlike all the other romances which have been noticed, I suppose Meliadus to have been the work of a single author;—and he sets out like a true Knight Errant who is in search of adventures, without knowing what course he shall take, or where his journey is to end. His intention was to write a book about Palamedes,—the best conceived character in Tristram,—and in the name of Palamedes the author says he begins it; so he brings Esclabor, the father of this Knight, from Babylon to Rome, and from Rome to Northumberland, and having thus got to King Arthur, nothing more is said about the intended hero. A few desultory adventures of King Pharamond, and the Morboult of Ireland, bring Meliadus on the stage, and his rival the Bon Chevalier sans paour. Sans paour he was, but not sans reproche, having at a tournament either done something which he ought not to have done, or left undone something which he ought to have done,—I do not recollect which, for many years have elapsed since I read the book, and the circumstance is not among my notes: but it is manifestly in reference to this character and this circumstance that the Chevalier Bayard obtained his well known appellation. Meliadus and the Bon Chevalier sans paour are the two heroes of the Romance, nor is it possible to discover which of them the author himself prefers, for he does them equal justice. Many tales of their heroism and of their rivalry are related, just in the manner of the episodes in Gyron, so much so indeed as decidedly to identify the author of the two books, were there no other proof. The manner in which each speaks of his rival is always very fine, and in the noblest spirit of chivalry.

The business of the first half the book ends in a tournament where they take different sides, and where on the whole the Bon Chevalier is the more fortunate. A more connected story follows. Meliadus falls in love with the Queen of Scotland and forcibly carries her off, out of King Arthur’s dominions: for which he is attacked in his own kingdom, and by the prowess of the Bon Chevalier sans paour conquered and taken. Arthur imprisons him; but his confinement is more rigorous than the King either intends or knows. Meantime Arthur falls sick: his vassals (like Alexander’s Captains) go to war with each other, and Ariohan, a terrible Saxon, at the instigation of some of them, invades Logres. Arthur recovers, and summons all his liegemen, but the Bon Chevalier sans paour refuses to come, saying that the king has disgraced and wronged all chivalry by the manner in which he treats the best knight living. Meliadus is then delivered in consequence of this generous conduct on the part of his rival: he accepts a defiance from Arioham, and concludes the war by defeating him. The remainder of the volume is filled up incoherently with any stories about the Round-Table Knights which came into the head of the author, or into the hands of the compiler. Galahad le Brun, Segurades, Gyron, Tristram, &c. &c. are introduced without the slightest connection of time, place, or anything else, and the whole ends with the death of Meliadus, in the words wherein it is related in Tristram.

XIV. Gyron le Courtois is the work of the same author, whose style indeed is distinctly marked, especially in dialogue, and who in his tone of morals is infinitely superior to all the other Romancers of this school.

This romance begins with an adventure of Branor le Brun, a knight above an hundred and twenty years of age, who though he had not borne arms for forty years, comes to Camelot to try whether the knights of King Arthur's court were as good as those of his days. He is however so persuaded of their inferiority, that he only invites them to run at him, as at a quintain. Palamedes, Gawain, and many others unhorse themselves in doing this; but the old knight honours the king, Sir Tristram, and Sir Lancelot so much as to take a spear against them, and he overthrows them like so many children. An adventure of Tristram and Palamedes then follows (without any connection) which is in the Morte Arthur.

Gyron is now introduced, and goes to Maloanc, the castle of his friend Danayn le Roux. The lady of Maloanc, Danayn's wife, falls in love with him, and tempts him twice, but without effect. They go to a tournament, where Meliadus and his friend Sir Lac are present; Sir Lac becomes enamoured of the lady, waylays her after the tournament, and wins her from her escort of five and twenty knights, but loses her himself to Gyron. Gyron unluckily has now caught from Sir Lac the love with which the lady herself had not been able to inspire him; his heart gives way to the temptation; he leads her, "nothing loth," to a fountain in the forest, and takes off his armour. "At this point of time, when they were in this guise, ready to commit the villainy, then it happened that the spear of Gyron which was placed against a tree, fell upon his sword and made it fall into the fountain. And Gyron who, as ye have heard, loved this sword greatly, as soon as he saw it fall into the water, ran towards it, and left the lady. And when he came to the fountain, and saw that the sword was at the bottom of the water, he took it out, being greatly vexed, and drew it from the scabbard, and began to wipe it. And then he began to regard the letters which were written upon the sword; they had been cut there by reason of the good knight Hector le Brun. And these were the proper words which were there written: Loyauté passe tout, et fausseté si honnit tout, et deceit tous hommes dedans quelz elle se herberge. Upon this his conscience smites him with such remorse for having sinned in intention, that he instantly stabs himself. The lady, who is called by no other name than La Belle Dame de Maloanc, prevents him from repeating the blow, and after a while Red Danayn finds them in this situation. The whole truth is acknowledged to him, and he, not to be wanting in generosity, loves Gyron more than ever for this his courtesy, as it is termed, and takes him home to Maloanc, where he is soon healed. During all this time Gyron is only known to this family, the rest of the world supposing him to be dead. A great deal concerning Hector le Brun is related by way of episode to King Meliadus, and Gyron occasionally hears stories of himself introduced with considerable skill, as well as interest, to raise his character.

This part of the Romance, though interrupted with some episodical matter, has more unity of purpose than is usual in such works. There is no other division than that of chapters; but in what may be called the second part, the character, or more properly the conduct of the two friends is reversed. Red Danayn going to escort a damsel for Gyron, to whom she appertains, betrays his trust, and carries her off; Gyron pursues him, and overtaking him at last, defeats him after a desperate combat, and though he had determined to take his life, spares him for the sake of courtesy. Immediately afterwards he rescues him from a giant. The incidental parts in this division, are, a story of Galahalt le Brun, with whom Gyron in his youth had been companion; and a curious adventure of Breus sans pitie, in which he finds the bodies of Febus and the damsel of Northumberland in a house hewn in a rock; and learns their history from the son of Febus, a very old man, who in this habitation leads a life of penance with his son, which son is the father of Gyron, a fact of which Gyron is ignorant, he it appears being in the predicament of Prince Prettyman. Then comes an excellent adventure of the knight sans paour in the valley of Serfage, where Naban the black makes serfs of every person who enters: the reader is referred for the sequel to the Romance of Meliadus. Danayn in his turn delivers Gyron and his damsels, who had been betrayed, and were tied to a tree that they might suffer from the severity of the weather in the cold country of Sorolois. These knights are now reconciled; they separate, each seeking adventures, both are made prisoners; and we are referred to the history of Meliadus for their release, "the Latin book from which this is translated saying no farther." The Romance ends with a chapter in which Galineus the white, son of Gyron and the Damsel, who was born in the preceding chapter, defeats the best knights of the Round Table one after another; but he is a wicked knight himself, having been wickedly brought up by the false traitor who imprisoned his father.

Francis the first of France preferred this to all other books of chivalry, and for that reason commanded Luigi Alamanni to versify it in Italian; the command was repeated by his successor Henry II.; but Alamanni added little to his reputation by the poem; the easy sweetness of his verse is less delightful than the simplicity and strength of the old prose. The poet has justly praised the morality of his story; I know no other Romance so completely free from all impurities of thought or language; there are indications enough in it of an immoral age, but it seems as if the writer had escaped the contagion. Either in the poem or in the Romance, Spenser probably found the original of his Braggadochio. What may be suspected in many of these books appears almost certain in this, that the writer frequently, when he began an adventure, knew as little how it was to end, as the knight who set off in quest of one; he invented the story as he proceeded with it, and sometimes in its progress modified, or completely changed the character which he brought upon the stage. It is worthy of notice that in this Romance the knights of King Arthur's court are represented as mere children to those of Uther Pendragon's days. The prowess of these elder worthies exceeds even the hyperboles of Esplanian: one of them makes nothing of attacking large armies single-handed, and killing giants with a blow of the fist.

of Lancelot, Tristram, Mелиadus, and Gyron. The following work, great part of which is incorporated in the Morte Arthur, is in Mr.
Laing's collection.

Le second volume du sainct greaal, contenant la conquiste dudict sainct Greaal, faict de Lancelot du Lac, Galaad, Perceval et Boora.

This remarkable book is said to have been translated by command of the Holy Church, from Latin into French, by a person whose name is sometimes written Sire Robert de Berron, sometimés de Borsen, and whose Christian name is as little determined, being in some places Robert, and in others Pierre. The name perhaps is as fictitious as the command of the church; bold, however, as the latter falsehood may appear, the author has advanced a more extraordinary assertion, which I know not whether to qualify as fiction or as intended imposture. He affirms that what he is relating ought to be received as truth, car celluy, he proceeds, seroit plain de trop folle hardiesse qui oseroit monstre mensonge en si haute chose comme est ceste saignee hystoire que le vray crucifix fist et escripvit de sa propre main, et pour ce doit il estre tenu en plus grant honneur. He then proceeds to say, that according to the Scriptures, our Saviour wrote only twice during his mortal life, once when he composed the Lord's prayer, and once when the woman was taken in adultery; ja ne trouvons si hardy clerc qui dye que Dieu fist oncques escriture puis la resurrection, ne mais la saincte escription du Sainct Greaal seullement, et qui vouldroit dire que puis il eust fait autre escription de auctorite il seroit tenu a menteur: et si dy bien quil seroit de trop folle hardyesse qui mensonge vouldroit mettre en si haulle chose comme est ceste hystoire que le filz de Dieu escripvit luy mesmes de sa propre main, puis que il eust mis la mortelle vie hors, et revestu la mageste celestie.

Whether this blasphemous fiction be the unpardonable license of a romancer's fancy, or the pious fraud of some zealous believer in transubstantiation, I presume not to determine: in the dark ages there were no bounds either to such fancies or such frauds. Legends not less impudent have obtained belief in the Romish church; and if the light of knowledge, which at one time trembled in its socket, had been put out, the Sainct Greaal, with whatever intent it was written, might possibly have become one of the sacred books of the west, as the Mahabbarat and the Ramayuna are received for holy scripture in India.

The first part of this book is clearly by one hand, and that hand may be traced (if I mistake not) in Lancelot du Lac, which in its printed state seems to have undergone many interpolations. The legend of the tree of life is found in both Romances, and the dreams, types and moralizations of the Sainct Greaal, like the Lord Savage, the Physician without physic, and the Speaking Flowers at the beginning of Lancelot, are precisely in the worst manner of the Gesta Romanorum. There is not the slightest allusion to the tradition concerning Glastonbury, the writer therefore was ignorant even of the legendary history of England. The second part has no moralizations, and appears to be by a different author, perhaps by many; of this indeed there is internal proof: Perceval, whose name is thus written towards the conclusion, is in other places called Perlevaux.

XVI. This personage is the hero of a Romance which is also in Mr. Laing’s collection, and from which some parts are blended with the story of the S. Greaal in the Morte Arthur.

It is stated in the Prologue to this volume, that Philip, Count of Flanders, gave orders to bring to light the life and chivalrous feats of Perceval, according to the chronicle of the said Prince, and the treatise of the Sainct Greaal. Both the count and his chronicler died before this could be accomplished. A long time after, Madame Jehanne, Countess of Flanders, seeing the beginning of this chronicle, and knowing what had been the intention of her ancestor Count Philip, ordered ung sien familier orateur, by name Mennessier, to translate and complete the work. “The which he did, but forasmuch as his language, and that of his predecessor, is not after the usage of our common French, but altogether unaccustomed and strange, to satisfy the desires, pleasures, and will of the princes, lords, and others who follow the mother tongue of France, I, says the writer, have employed myself in translating the book, and converting it from rhyme into prose, following closely, according to my possibility and power, the sense of my preceding translators." I know not whether the metrical Romance was in Flemish, or in the Walloon dialect, or in the dialect of Picardy, in which some writers have supposed that Amadis of Gaul was originally written, in contradiction to the most positive and undoubted evidence.

This volume seems rather to have been made up from many metrical Romances than from one. One story in it may decidedly be traced to a Welsh or Breton origin. A chapter begins thus, _tye fine et faut le compte de lesu_, when no tale of a shield has been told. An adventure of Gawain is related with gross inconsistencies, which could not have existed in any single original; and Gawain occupies as great a portion of the book as Perceval himself. Perceval, though clearly identified with the personage of that name in the Sainct Greaal, is not represented here as having the virtue of continence. The Romance has many interesting situations, but Perceval, as here portrayed, is less attractive than any of his compeers.

XVII. There are other Romances which I have not met with, from whence materials for the Morte Arthur have been drawn; but these are the principal sources, Lancelot, Tristan, and the Sainct Greaal, having furnished nearly two thirds of the whole. Whether this compilation was made originally by Sir Thomas Malory, or translated by him from a French compendium, has not been ascertained; nor is it of importance, as there is no claim to originality on his part. The compiler seems to have altered the incidents as freely as the arrangement, and may perhaps have made some additions of his own; Mr. Douce has suggested that he used manuscripts to the texts of which we may probably always be strangers, and this therefore must remain doubtful. It is probable also that some of his materials have never been printed. "O blessed Lord," says Caxton,
"when I remember the great and many volumes of St. Graal, Ghalehot, and Lancelot du Lac, Gawain, Perceval, Lionel and Tristram, and many other, of whom were over long to rehearse, and also to me unknown." Ghalehot may perhaps mean the hault Prince Galahaut, who figures in the history of Lancelot; or more probably Galahad, who sate in the siege perilous, of whom there certainly existed a separate Romance; it was the favourite book of Nuno Alvarez Pereira, who endeavoured as far as possible to imitate the character which he admired, became himself the fair ideal of a perfect knight, as courteous as he was brave, as humane as he was courteous, as pious as he was humane, uniting in himself the accomplishments of a hero, the feelings of a true patriot, and the virtues of a Christian and a saint.

It seems too, from the exclamation of Caxton, that Gawain and Lionel had each their history; but I believe none are known to be in existence, or at least that none have been published. The story of Beaumayns has, from its structure and completeness, the appearance of having been a metrical Romance. I do not know from whence the story of Balin and Balan has been derived; it has finer circumstances in it than any other part of the Morte Arthur.

The history of the Round Table Romances may be investigated with better opportunities in France than in England; but it must be sought for also among the remains of the Welsh and Breton fictions, and something may perhaps be discovered in the Walloon tongue, though it is to be feared that many a precious manuscript may have perished during the first frenzy of the revolution in Brabant and the adjoining countries. If a society for this purpose were formed by the lovers of chivalrous literature in all countries, the members, while they procured their own individual gratification, would contribute something toward the restoration of that feeling which formerly prevailed in the republic of letters, but which the convulsions of the political world have so long and so mournfully suspended. The object should be, a faithful republication of all this family of romances, whether in verse or prose, with a careful investigation of the history of each. It would not be difficult to detect, from internal marks, the order in which they were written, though perhaps impossible to ascertain the time. In their present state the productions of very different times are frequently blended together. Much light would be thrown, in the progress of these researches, upon the history of literature and the manners of the middle ages.

XVIII. The Morte Arthur was a favourite book among our ancestors. It continued to be printed till the middle of the 17th century, with much alteration of orthography, but very little change of language; and were it again modernized in the same manner, and published as a book for boys, it could hardly fail of regaining its popularity. When I was a schoolboy I possessed a wretchedly imperfect copy, and there was no book, except the Faery Queen, which I perused so often, or with such deep contentment.

The present edition is a reprint with scrupulous exactness from the first edition by Caxton, in Earl Spencer’s library, that nobleman having, with his wonted liberality, permitted a transcript to be made from this most rare and valuable volume for this purpose.

XIX. "In books of chivalry," says Addison, "where the point of honour is strained to madness, the whole story runs on chastity and courage. The damsel is mounted on a white palfrey, as an emblem of her innocence; and to avoid scandal must have a dwarf for her page. She is not to think of a man, until some misfortune has brought a knight errant to her relief. The knight falls in love, and did not gratitude restrain her from murdering her deliverer, would die at her feet by her disdain. However he must waste many years in the desert, before her virgin heart can think of a surrender. The knight goes off, attacks every thing he meets that is bigger and stronger than himself, seeks all opportunities of being knocked on the head; and after seven years rambling returns to his mistress, whose chastity has been attacked in the mean time by giants and tyrants, and undergone as many trials as her lover's valour." This is altogether inaccurate. Addison appears not to have read the books which he thus characterises: he mingles the manners of the chivalrous romance with the morals of Cassandra, Cleopatra, Clelia, and other works of that class which were fashionable in his days, and has thus produced a description which resembles neither. Amadis was the first romance in which the female character was made respectable; and even there, although the author designed to make the women as admirable as the heroes of his tale, he thought the virtue of chastity might be dispensed with, provided they were constant in their love.

The morals of the chivalrous romance were however always taken at the highest standard of the age, except perhaps in Tirante the White, where they are brutal even to loathsomeness; but the ferocious spirit of the times frequently appears. Gawain and his brothers rescue their mother from a villainous knight, who has beaten and bruised her as shamefully as the Infantes of Carrion used the daughters of the Cid. Gawain killed him: "and then Aggravain, Gaheret, and Gaheriet, alighted from their horses, and the one cut off his head, and the other cut off his arms, and the other ran his sword through his body; and still this did not satisfy them, but they cut him in pieces, like flesh upon a chopping board." Lancelot and Palamedes take a squire belonging to Naban the Black, of the valley of Serfage. "Sir," said Lancelot, "what shall we do with this squire?
It is proper to shame him in his members, and send him back to Naban, in order to enrage him and do him a despite. Go then to the squire, and cut off one of his feet, and one of his hands, and bore out one of his eyes; and set him again upon his horse, and send him back to his master the giant, and tell him that Lancelot du Lac and Palamedes, companions of the Round Table, have done him this

despite: and that we will speedily come and visit him. And as Lancelot had commanded, so it was done*. The argument of a chapter in the Sainct Greaal runs thus: "how Perlevaulx had a tub made ready, and made all the knights of the Sire des Mares be beheaded before him, so that their blood should run into the tub; and how he caused the Sire des Mares to be drowned in this tub, in the blood of his knights!" The history of Europe during the middle ages, is full of cruelties like these: it must be considered as a great merit in the romance writers, that they have not introduced them more frequently; that they have sometimes reprehended them, and that in their ideal heroes they held up for imitation fairer models of heroic virtue than were to be found in real life. Chivalry was in its noon-day glory under Edward III., and the influence of chivalrous literature may be traced not only in the splendour of his magnificent court, but in the virtues of the Black Prince.

XX. The authors of these books never supposed that they were outraging probability; none of the marvels which they feigned were regarded as impossible; they were all founded upon the received opinions of the age; the belief in magic, the science of gems, and the wonderful properties of wells, fountains, and lakes, whose effects were described in books, the authenticity of which had never been questioned. Travellers and naturalists told of more monsters than the romance writers ever devised. Their giants were not larger than those who are sometimes imported from Ireland; they are frequently represented as fighting on horseback, and it was never thought necessary to imagine a breed of gigantic horses for their use. Boyardo indeed, or Berni, exceeds this; but his license is that of a burlesque writer, the vice of all the Italian romantic poets. Even they never created giants of such steeple-stature as was attributed to the heroes of old, whose sepulchres were said to be discovered in different lands, and whose fancied bones were actually shewn in museums.

* Meliades, f. 139.
It is in describing their tournaments, and the exploits of their knights on horseback, that the Romance writers have committed the greatest exaggeration: their heroes seldom encounter without breaking a lance, and giving or receiving a fall. There exists, however, a full account of the proceedings at a pass which Suero de Quiñones, and nine companions, maintained at the Bridge of Orbigo in Spain, against all comers, for thirty days, in the year 1484. This Paso Honroso, as it is called, is the most famous adventure of its kind that was ever undertaken; and a writer was present who recorded all the circumstances with the utmost minuteness. This curious record has not been preserved, but a careful compendium of it was published in 1588, by Fr. Juan de Pineda, author of the Monarquia Ecclesiastica, and having become exceedingly scarce, was reprinted at Madrid in 1783. Seven hundred and twenty seven careers were run; the combatants frequently failed in their career, and seldom fell. One person was killed, the lance unfortunately piercing him in the eye; very few were hurt, and only an hundred and sixty six spears were broken. This appears poor jousting after a tournament in Romance, yet it is not likely ever to have been excelled in any real exhibition.

The prowess of the knights of Romance in other respects is not much exaggerated. Lancelot and Tristram in armour are what the Chicken and Guley were without it; men of the greatest skill, strength, and courage, in a mode of fighting wherein those qualifications rendered success certain.

XXI. Nothing can be more inartificial in structure than the Romances of the Round Table. Adventure produces adventure in infinite series; not like a tree, whose boughs and branches bearing a necessary relation and due proportion to each other, combine into one beautiful form, but resembling such plants as the prickly pear, where one joint grows upon another, all equal in size and alike in shape, and the whole making a formless and misshapen mass. Even this clumsy mode of transition is often disregarded, and the author passes from adventure to adventure without the slightest connection, introducing you without prologue or prelude of any kind to a new scene, and bringing forward a new set of personages. In this respect Amadis is greatly superior to every other work of the same description. Lobeira was the first Romance writer who formed a clear and connected plan, and bore it steadily in mind throughout the whole progress of his narrative. The skill with which his fable is constructed is not less admirable than the beauty of the incidents, and the distinctness with which the characters are conceived and delineated. Amadis infinitely surpasses every earlier romance in all these points, and has not been equalled in either of them by any of later date.

These folios were the only books of recreation when they were composed and printed; and in those ages large volumes were not regarded with that fear which is now felt by the busy, and affected by the superficial and the vain. A folio romance was the stock of amusement for weeks or months, a dozen or a score of pages sufficed for the evening's reading; and perhaps more satisfaction was gained than lost by travelling thus deliberately through the story; it became an habitual pleasure. The rapidity of modern narrative is less readily understood, and produces fainter effect; these tales were slowly received, and made a profound impression, as slow showers penetrate the deepest; and hence it was that they so strongly affected the manners and morals of the age. As the manners have become obsolete, the fashion for such works has passed away; and now for the full enjoyment of them a certain aptitude is required, as it is for poetry and music: where that aptitude exists, perhaps no works of imagination produce so much delight. It is something like that pleasure which the poet and the painter partake from forest scenery, or in following the course of a mountain stream.

READING a rare accomplishment. § I.]—The knights in romance are seldom represented as deficient in this respect, still it is spoken of as an accomplishment. When Gawain wins the espee aux estranges rennes which had belonged to Judas Maccabeus, and Joseph of Arimathaea, he finds an inscription upon it, and the writer tells us that he could read well,—Et Gawain qui bien savoit lire tendit la main, &c. Perceval, f. 68.

It appears that Perceval himself could not read; entour de cet anneau y avoit en escript en lectres dargent deux vers en latin qui signifoient, que nul chevalier nieres a lannel son destrier, si il ne se peult comparer au meilleur chevalier du monde. Perceval ne savoit pas lyre, mais bien en avoit ouy parler, &c. f. 177.

In the Partidas there are reasons given why it is proper that the sons of a king should be taught to read and write.

Some of the Arabian Tales bear the strongest features of chivalrous romance. § IV.]—In a note to Ewlin's Travels, the translator, M. Hammer, says, that the three principal heroes of Arabian chivalry are Antar, Hamza, and Seedi Battaal. Antar is the author of one of the seven poems called the Mosllakat, known to English readers by Sir W. Jones's translation. Hamza was a hero of the first age of Islam, and uncle of Mahommed; his deeds are celebrated in the Hamzanamah. Seede Battaal is the hero of the age when Islam had attained its highest power and splendour. M. Hammer says, that this title signifies literally the same as Cid el Campeador, and that Ruydiez de Bivar obtained this title in imitation of the Mussulman hero; in this he is assuredly mistaken.
XXXIV

Arthur. § VI.]—According to Mr. Owen, Arthur is recorded with Morgan the Courteous, and Rhun, as one of the three blood-stained sovereigns of Britain; an appellation not less equivocal than it is indiscriminating. But it appears in the Cambrian Biography, that there is a different edition of this triad, in which Llew Llawgwyfes appears instead of Arthur. And in another work, where Arthur's name is retained, a different interpretation is given of the epithet, making them the three ruddy chiefs. If this be not as vague an epithet as that of blood-stained, it would tend to show that the Keltic complexion did not predominate at that time; among the chiefs perhaps it did not, owing to the mixture of Roman, and, in the west of England possibly also, of Iberian blood.

The slight mention which Llywarch has made of Arthur may perhaps be accounted for by the triad which records that bard as one of the three free and discontented guests of Arthur's court. But some of Llywarch's poems have been lost, and in these there may have been more notice of the Welsh hero.

Geffrey of Monmouth's History, after long maintaining its credit, was included in the Index Expurgatorius. "I know not," says Hackett, "why it should stand branded with a black coal among the books prohibited by the church of Rome." There would, however, be good reason for the prohibition if the following story, which Giraldus Cambrensis relates, were true.

"It is worthy of observation, that there lived in the neighbourhood of this city of legionis in our time, a Welshman named Melarius, who, by the following means, acquired the knowledge of future events, and the occult sciences. Having on a certain night met a damsel whom he loved in a pleasant and convenient place; while he was indulging in her embraces, instead of a beautiful girl, he found in his arms a hairy, rough and hideous creature, the sight of which deprived him of his senses; and after remaining many years in this condition, he was restored to health in the church of Saint David's, through the merits of its saints. But having always had an extraordinary familiarity with unclean spirits by seeing them, knowing them, talking with them, and calling each by his proper name, he was enabled, through their assistance, to foretell future events: he was indeed often deceived (as they are) with respect to circumstances at a great distance; but was less mistaken in affairs which were likely to happen soon, or within the space of a year. They appeared to him on foot, equipped as hunters, with horns suspended from their necks, and truly as hunters not of animals but of souls: he particularly met them near monasteries and religious places; for where rebellion exists, there is the greatest need of armies and strength. He knew when any one spoke falsely in his presence, for he saw the devil, as it were, leaping and exulting upon the tongue of the liar: and if he looked into a book faultily or falsely written, although wholly illiterate, he would point out the place with his finger. Being questioned how he could gain such knowledge, he said that he was directed by the demon's finger to the place. In the same manner entering into the dormitory of a monastery, he indicated the bed of any monk not sincerely devoted to religion: for he said, that the spirit of gluttony and surfeit was in every respect sordid; but that the spirit of luxury and lust was more beautiful than others in appearance, though, in fact, most foul. When the evil spirits oppressed him too much, the Gospel of Saint John was placed on his bosom, when, like birds, they immediately vanished; but when that book was removed, and the history of the Britons, by Geoffrey ap Arthur, substituted in its place, they instantly re-appeared in greater numbers, and remained a longer time on his body and on the book. It is worthy of remark, that Barnabas placed the Gospel of St. Matthew upon sick persons, and they were healed; from which, as well as from the foregoing circumstance, it appears how great a dignity and reverence is due to the sacred books of the Gospel, and with what danger and risk of damnation every one who swears falsely by them deviates from the paths of truth.”—Hoare's Giraldus, 1. 105.

Certain it is that many of the Round Table fictions originated in Wales, or in Bretagne. § VII.]—In Mr. Owen's Cambrian Biography is the name of "Caradog Varichyas, or Caradog with the Brawdy Arm, the son of Llyr Merini, Prince of the Cornish Britons, in the close of the fifth and the former part of the sixth centuries. He is styled in the triads, one of the three celebrated commanders of cavalry."

A considerable part of the Romance of Perceval le Gallois relates to this personage, and the character of this part is so very different from the usual manner of Romance, that I suspected it to be of different origin, before, almost by accident, I was enabled thus satisfactorily to trace it. I will as concisely as possible abstract the story, in hope that some Welsh or Breton antiquarian may pursue it to its source.

King Carados, who holds his court at Nantes, marries Yseenne, the beautiful niece of Arthur. Unfortunately she had attracted the affections of Eliauere, a knight and enchanter. (This name bears a remote resemblance to Llyr Merini, but a closer one to Llwyd ab Llwydion, mentioned in the Cambrian Biography, as "a mythological character.""

The enchanter deceives the husband in a manner too loathsome to be repeated, and becomes the father of a young Carados, whom the king believes to be his son and lawful heir. When the youth is of proper years, King Arthur holds a court planiere for the purpose of knighting him. On such occasions it was the well-known custom of the king never to dine till some adventure had presented itself, and this day there happened a very remarkable one; for a knight made his appearance, and having obtained a boon, on condition that what he should ask was reasonable, replied, that he would deceive nobody: fair blow for blow was what he desired; he would lay his neck on a block for any knight to strike, on condition that if his head were cut off, and he should recover from the wound, the knight should submit in his turn to the same experiment. Sir Kay, with good reason, thought this a very uncomfortable proposal, and protested that he would not accept it for all the wealth in the world. And when the knight offered his sword with which the operation was to be performed, no person ventured to accept it; till Carados, growing angry at the sort of disgrace which was thus incurred by the Round Table, threw aside his mantle and took it. "Do you do this as one of the best knights?" said the stranger, "No," he replied, "but as one of the most foolish." The stranger lays his head upon a block, receives a blow which sends it rolling from his shoulders, walks after it, picks it up, replaces it with great success, and says he will return when the court shall be assembled next year, and claim his turn. When the anniversary arrives, both parties are punctual to their engagement; great entreaties are used by the king and queen, and the whole court, in behalf of Carados, but the stranger is inflexible; the young knight lays his neck upon the block, and more than once desires him to make an end of the business, and not keep him longer in so disagreeable a state of expectation. At last he strikes him gently with the side of the sword, takes him aside, and tells him, what the reader has probably surmised, that he is his father, Eliaurus the enchanter, revealing to him the whole secret of his birth, and all the abominable circumstances connected with it.

Carados, who is very much distressed at the discovery, goes immediately to Nantes, and discloses it to the king. It is ascertained that Yeune still continues her adulterous intercourse with the enchanter; to prevent which, and to punish him in the most lenient manner, she is by her son's advice confined in a tower. But bars, bolts, and stone walls are no obstacles to an enchanter; Eliaures persists in visiting her, and entertains her at night with concerts to the disturbance of the neighbourhood, who complain to the king. Carados is again consulted; by his help the enchanter is surprised and taken; and the king subjects him to revenge to the same unutterable indignities which he himself had been made to commit. The incident is perhaps the most disgusting that occurs in any work of fiction; and it is to be regretted that it should defile a story which is in other respects of singular beauty, and even purity of feeling.

Eliaures would have borne this revenge more patiently than might have been expected from an enchanter, as if he was conscious of being the aggressor. Yeonne, on the other hand, conceives a deadly hatred against her son, and insists that her paramour shall inflict upon him some cruel punishment. He yields to her intreaties; and by his directions when Carados next visits her, she pretends to have her hair dishevelled, and desires him to reach her comb from the closet. When he opens the closet, a serpent, enchanted for the purpose, fastens upon his arm, and remains there sucking at his flesh and blood,—no human skill sufficing either to remove the reptile, or alleviate the torments which Carados endures.

Carados was betrothed to Guinier, sister to his bosom friend Cador, and daughter to the King of Cornwall. As soon as they are informed of his deplorable condition, they set out for Nantes, that Guinier may attend upon him. When he hears of their coming, his first emotion is that of joy and love: presently he begins to fear that the sight of his emaciated form and of his sufferings will disgust Guinier; and this apprehension becomes so strong, that he departs secretly from Nantes, and hides himself in a hermitage. He is sought far and near by the knights of Arthur's court; and Cador makes a vow never to desist from the quest till he shall have found him. He goes through "England, Ireland, Gueldres, Northumberland, Scotland, and Spain," and then returning into Bretagne, after more than two years wandering, discovers him in the hermitage, reduced almost to a skeleton, and evidently near his death. All other means of relief having already been tried in vain, Cador has recourse to the wicked mother, and succeeds in exciting her to have compassion upon her son. Accordingly she applies to Eliaures, being in great fear of losing her soul if Carados should lose his life. The enchanter tells her that he could not live three months longer unless he were relied, and that there is but one method of delivering him. A maiden must be found, his equal in birth and in beauty, and loving him better than herself, so that she will expose herself to the same danger to deliver him. Two vessels are then to be provided, the one filled with sour wine, and the other with milk. Carados must enter the first, naked, so that the wine shall reach his neck; and the maid, naked in like manner, must get into the other, and exposing her bosom upon the edge of the vessel, invite the serpent to forsake the withered flesh of his victim, for this fresh and inviting food. The vessels were to be placed three feet apart, and as the serpent crossed from one to the other, a knight was to cut off his head: if he failed in his blow, Carados indeed would be de-ivered, but it would be only to see the object of his love suffering the same cruel and hopeless torment. The sequel is easily foreseen; Guimier willingly exposes herself to the perilous adventure, and Cador kills the serpent. That arm in which Carados had suffered so long recovered its strength, but not its shape; the tendons and the very bones were swollen, in consequence of which he was called Carados Briefbras, manifestly the Vraichoras of Mr. Owen's Caradog.

Shortly afterwards the adventure of the drinking horn occurs at Arthur's court, as in the ballad of the Boy and the Mantle, Carados being the Cradoc of the poem. The ballad is evidently older than the printed Romance of Perceval, and therefore derived from the same source.
How well his wife deserved the honour which she then obtained is shown by this story, which is more probably of Breton than of Welsh origin.

The single stanza which has been preserved of Arthur's composition, records Caradog as one of his favourite chiefs.

I have three heroes in battle, Mael the tall, and Llyr with his army,
And Caradog the pillar of Wales.

_A bold fiction, bordering upon impiety._ [IX.]—"His mother's confession," says Heywood, (p. 3), "that he was conceived by the compression of a fantastical spiritual creature, without a body, may be easily believed to be a meer fiction, or excuse, to mitigate her fault (being a royall virgin, the daughter of King Demetius), or to conceal the person of her sweet-heart, by disclosing of whose name she had undoubtedly exposed him to imminent danger; and this is most probable. And yet we read that the other fantastical congression is not impossible. For Speusippus the son of Plato's sister, and Elearchus the Sophist, and Amaxilides in the second book of his philosophy, affirm, in the honour of Plato, that his mother Perictione, having congression with the imaginary shadow of Apollo, conceived and brought into the world him who proved to be the Prince of Philosophers."

Faction and discontent applied this notion to Justinian; Procopius has done no injury to the emperor by recording it, but by affecting to believe the absurdities which he relates, he has effectually destroyed his own reputation; rendering himself infamous by grossly calumniating those whom he had formerly grossly flattered. The passage is not a little curious, if we remember that it is related as grave history, by the best historian of the age!

"Many of my friends are persuaded, and I also like them, that Justinian and Theodora are two malignant demons, who, after having held counsel together upon the means of ruining the world, have not found any more proper than that of assuming a human form. That which I advance can be justified by many proofs, but above all by the enormity of the evils which they have done, since the power of demons surpasses that of men. I admit that there have been formerly men who have rendered themselves formidable by the excess of their power, and by the wickedness of their nature; who have overthrown and desolated provinces, and who have been capable of changing the face of the whole earth; but fortune has seconded their intentions, and she has made inundations, earthquakes and contagious maladies, serve to the execution of their designs, in such a manner that the calamities which they have produced cannot be imputed to them, without imputing them at the same time to a superior power. They say that the mother of Justinian had declared to her friends that he was not the son of Sabatias, nor of any other man; but before she was pregnant of him, she had been visited by a genius who would not let himself be seen, though he made himself be felt, and who vanished like a dream. Some of his officers who had purer souls, and more disengaged from the corruption of the body, say, that they have often seen in his place a phantom during the night. There was one who said that as Justinian raised himself from his chair to walk, for he could not stay a long time in one place, he had seen his head disappear, the rest of his body not ceasing to walk; and as he doubted the fidelity of his eyes, and as he apprehended that it was only an illusion he had seen, the head was reunited to the body. Another who had been accustomed to be always near him, related, that his countenance appeared sometimes like a shapeless mass, in which they could not distinguish any eyebrows, eyes, nose, mouth, or any other part; and that finally he resumed his ordinary form. I have not seen that which I write, but I have heard those say it, who declared that they had seen it. They say, that a monk who had made himself very agreeable to God by the ardour of his piety, and by the holiness of his manners, having been prayed by his brothers to go to Constantinople to speak in favour of the people of his neighbourhood, who suffered under great vexations, he was admitted before Justinian; but when he was upon the step of the door, he retired quite astonished, although the eunuch who introduced him, and the others who were present, invited him to enter: that when he was in the inn, and his friends asked him why he had fled in that manner, he answered, it was because he had seen the prince of the demons, and that he had not wished to ask any thing of him. Certainly there is no person who, in considering that he drank not, ate not, nor hardly slept at all, and however much he loved women, he walked all the night, who would not have taken him for a demon. Those who have formerly loved Theodora say, that when she prostituted herself upon the theatre, a demon often came who drove them away, and who passed the night with her. A dancing girl named Macedonia, who was of the faction of the blues at Antioch, and who in the reign of Justinian had acquired such a credit as to ruin by letters, which she wrote to Justinian, some principal people of the east, and to make their goods be confiscated; this dancing girl, I say, having gone to salute Theodora when she returned from Africa, and when she was afflicted with the injuries which Hecebolus had done her, and for the money which she had lost; and having consoled her by the hope that fortune one day would repair all her losses, Theodora replied to her, that the preceding night she had had a dream, which would not permit her to apprehend that she should want fortune, and which assured her that when she returned to Constantinople she would lie with the prince of the demons, and that she would acquire by this alliance all the treasures of the earth. This is the opinion that many have of Justinian and Theodora.”

A miraculous conception is the only miracle which the Romish Hagiographists have not bestowed upon their saints. An approach to it has been made in the history of a Scotch saint Kentigern. “There was a king in the north country, and he was a pagan. His daughter had heard sermons; and nothing affected her imagination so much as the maiden fruitfulness of Mary the most pure. Admiring and loving this mystery, she desired and longed with a presumptuous boldness and a certain female temerity, to resemble the Virgin in that respect, and began to solicit the King of Heaven with assiduous prayers to this effect. After some time had elapsed she found reason to believe that her prayers were granted, and glorified God. Quod enim in ea natum est, de complexu humano susceptit; sed ipsa multoties asservuit, et juramento constrinxit, quod a quo, vel quando, aut quomodo conceperit, in conscientiâ non habeat. Populus enim diaesia S. Kentegerni stultus et insipiens, ipsum de Virgine conceptum et natum adhuc astruere non veretur. Sed quis, aut quomodo sator terram araverit seu severit, cum Domino dante benignitatem, terra fructum optimum protulerit, absurdum sane diuitus indagare arbitramur. Acta Sanctorum. 11 Jan. p. 816.

Heywood fixes the place of Merlin's birth; who, according to this veracious historian, was a Wiltshire man. "The town or city called Kaier Merlin," he says, "which implies Merlin's town, or Merlin's borough, is no doubt the same which we call at this day Marlborough." P. 20.

The Romance has a good remark upon his birth. "Merlin was great and tall of stature, and large of limb, and strong. But he was swarthy, and more hairy than any other man. And right noble he was, and courteous, and a gentleman on his mother's side; but of his father, says his historian, I shall say nothing, for you have already heard who begot him." Vol. ii. f. 13.

When the messengers whom Vortigern sent in search of Merlin that they might kill him, and bring his blood to sprinkle upon the foundations of Tumbledown Tower, came to the entrance of the town in which this misbegotten child lived, they saw a party of boys in a field who were playing at cross, qui sesbanoyent et jouoyent a la crosse. Merlin seeing the horsemen, and knowing for what they were come, in order to excite their attention the sooner, took his cross and struck one of the other boys with it across the shin, so as to break the leg almost in two; upon which the other began to reproach him with the manner and mystery of his birth. (Merlin, Vol. i. f. 18.) Children then used in those days to play at soldiers, as they now play at soldiers, making, I suppose, mock processions.

Merlin. § IX.]—At the end of the first volume of Merlin are the following pious verses. They occur also at the end of the prophecies.

Merlin's disappearance. § IX.]—The story is thus told in the Romance of Merlin; though the termination is the same as it is described in other Romances, the circumstances are very differently stated.

There was a Vavasour of high lineage called Dyonas* from Dyane, a goddess of the sea. This goddess requested from the Gods of the Sea that the first child of Dyonas might be a female, and that she might have, as long as she lived, the gifts of grace and of worth; and that she might be sued and loved by the wisest man in the world; and that this man, who would flourish during the reign of King Vertigiers (Vortigern) king of La Bloye Bretaigne, as soon as he saw her, should incontinently fall in love with her, and never be able to leave that love, but wherever he might be think every night of the beauty of that damsel; and that he might teach her the art of necromancy, and many other occult sciences, and never refuse her any thing which she asked. This Dyonas married a niece of the Dutchess of Burgundy, and received with her from the duke, half the forest of Briogne as part of her dowry; the other half belonged to King Ban, and was shortly afterwards given him also in reward for his good services. The first child of this marriage was a daughter who was named Nymanne, qui est un nom de Calder, says the French author, qui est a dire en Français rien nen feray, (ce nom se tourna deusus Merlin) car ceste fille fut sage et si prudent qui bien se ient garder de plusieurs deceptions et chetivoces.

When this damsel was twenty-two years of age, Merlin, as he was travelling through the forest of Briogne, saw her sitting by the side of a beautiful spring; immediately he became enamoured of her, and as he was at this time in the form of a fat handsome varlet, the lady had no objection to enter into conversation with him. He told her what wonders he could perform, and she promised to be his true love upon honourable terms, if he would show her those wonders of which he spake. Je vous pris, dit la pucelle, Sire, que je voye une partie de vos jeux par tel convenant que a toujours mais eray votre accointee et votre amye, sans mal et sans villetie. The enchanter accordingly called up a grove of trees, a beautiful meadow, a band of vocal and instrumental music, and a bevy of knights, squires, damsels, and dames, who danced to the sweetest sounds. The song, however, seems to have been ill chosen for the occasion, for its burden was this:

Voirement se commencent amours En joie, et se finent en douleurs.

Presently a quintain was set up, and this sport was succeeded by jousting. When this was done, Merlin took the damsel by the hand and asked her what she thought of it; "Certes, said the lady, you have done so much that I am wholly yours. And then Merlin said, Lady, will you hold your covenant? By my faith, she replied, I will full willingly, so that you teach me your sports." A bargain was then made that Merlin should teach her every thing which she required, and that when he had fully instructed her in these arts, she would then consent to any thing which he might ask; upon these terms they plighted their true love to each other, and then he took his leave. Merlin, l. f. 145—7.

When Merlin related all this to his master Blaise, who seems to have been his confessor as well as historiographer, Blaise was much troubled, and censured him greatly, and gave him good advice; but good advice was lost upon Merlin; who saw his own fate, and with all his wisdom was unable to avoid it. Accordingly one day the enchanter took leave of his old master, telling him "it was the last time he would ever see him, for from thenceforth he must abide with his mistress, and should never more have the power of leaving her, nor of going and coming at his pleasure. When Blaise heard this, he said to him full sorrowfully, Since then it is so that you will not be able to depart when once you shall have gone there, fair friend go not there at all, for you well know the thing that must happen to you. Certes, answered Merlin, I needs must go, for so I have covenanted and promised; and even if I had not covenanted, I am so taken with her love that I could not forbear going. All this have I done myself, for I have taught her great part of what I know, and she will still learn more from me, for I have no power to withhold myself. With that Merlin departed from Blaise his master, and travelled so long in few hours, that he came to Viviane his mistriss." This was good travelling, for Blaise lived in Northumberland, and Viviane in France. They dwelt a long while together, and "she showed him greater semblance of love than she had ever done before, as one who knew so many enchantments that never other woman knew so much. So she devised within herself how she might detain him for ever more; but never could she compass nor achieve this; then, was she full sorrowful and vexed, and cast about how she might discover it. Then began she to fawn and to flatter Merlin more than before; and she said to him, My sweet friend, I do not yet know one thing which I would fain know, I pray you teach me it. And Merlin, who well knew what it was, and to what she tended, said to her, Mistress, what is it? Sir, said Viviane, I would have you teach and show me how to inclose and imprison a man without a tower, without walls, without chains, but by enchantments alone, in such manner that he may never be able to go out, except by me. When Merlin heard her he shook his head, and began to sigh deeply; and Viviane, when she perceived it, asked of him wherefore he sighed thus. Dame, said Merlin, I will tell you. Well I know that you are devising how you may detain me; but I am so taken, that perforce will I or not, it behoves me to do your will. When Viviane heard this, for her great treason, and the better to delude and deceive him, she put her arms round his neck, and began to kiss him, saying, that he might well be hers, seeing that she was his: You well know, said she, that the great love which I have in you, has made me love father and mother that I may have you in my arms day and night. All my desire and thought is in you; without you I have neither joy nor good. I have placed all my hope upon you, and I never look to have joy or good except from you. Seeing then that I love you, and you love me, is it not right that you should do my will and I yours? Certes, lady, yes, said Merlin, and I will do it; tell me what you would have. Sir, said she, I would that we should make a fair place and a suitable, so contrived by art and by cunning, that it might never be undone, and that you and I should be there in joy and in solace. My lady, said Merlin, I will perform all this. Sir, said she, I would not have you do it, but you shall teach me, and I will do it, and then it will be more to my will. I grant you this, said Merlin. Then he began to devise, and the damsel put it all in writing. And when he had devised the whole, then had the damsel full great joy, and showed him greater semblance of loving him than she had ever before made; and they sojourned together a long while. At length it fell out that as they were going one day hand in hand through the forest of Broceliande, they found a bush of white thorn which was laden with flowers; and they seated themselves under the shade of this white thorn upon the green grass, and they disported together and took their solace, and Merlin laid his head upon the damsel’s lap, and then she began to feal if he were asleep. Then the damsel rose and made a ring with her wimple round the bush and round Merlin, and began her enchantments such as he himself had taught her; and nine times she made the ring, and nine times she made the enchantment; and then she went and sate down by him, and placed his head again upon her lap; and when he awoke and looked round him, it seemed to him that he was inclosed in the strongest tower in the world, and laid upon a fair bed; then said he to the dame, My lady, you have deceived me unless you abide with me, for no one hath power to unmake this tower, save you alone. Fair friend, she replied, I shall often be here, and you shall hold me in your arms, and I will hold you in mine. And in this she held her covenant to him, for afterwards there was never night nor day in which she was not there. And Merlin never went out of that tower where his mistress Viviane had inclosed him. But she entered and went out again when she listed; and often time she regretted what she had done, for she had thought that the thing which he taught her could not be true, and willingly would she have let him out if she could.” T. 2. f. 134.

The writer very properly remarks upon Merlin, for having taught his mistress so much, quel en fit depuis, c'est encore tenu pour fol.

The disappearance of so remarkable and so useful a personage as Merlin occasioned great trouble at King Arthur’s court, and many knights set out in search of him; among other was Sir Gawain, whose fortune it was, while upon this quest, to meet with one of the most extraordinary adventures that ever befell him in the course of his eventful life. For as he was riding one day through a forest, thinking of his old friend Merlin, he fell into so deep a reverie, that he did not perceive a damsel approaching upon a black palfrey, with an ivory saddle and stirrups of gold. The damsel was so angry with him for not accosting her, that she called him the most villainous knight in the world; and as a punishment for his discourtesy, told him he should resemble the first person whom he met, and continue in that resemblance till he should meet her again. This first person proved to be a good knight, who, in consequence of an unhappy enchantment, was at this time a most deformed dwarf. Upon passing Sir Gawain he resumed his natural beauty, and poor Sir Gawain shrank within his armour like a withered kernel in a nutshell. In this deplorable state he pursued his quest till it was time to return to court. Then turning his face homeward, and cursing his evil fortune, he came into the forest of Broceliande, lamenting as he went along. Suddenly he heard the voice of one groaning on his right hand; looking that way he could see nothing save a kind of smoke which seemed like air, and through which he could not pass; and this impediment made him so wrathful that it deprived him of speech. Presently he heard a voice which said, Gawain, Gawain, be not out of heart, for every thing which must happen will come to pass. And when he heard the voice which thus called him by his right name, he replied, Who can this be who hath spoken to me? How, said the voice, Sir Gawain, know you me not? you were wont to know me well; but thus things are interwoven, and thus the proverb says true, esloignes la court et la court vous esloignera. So is it with me. Whilst I served King Arthur I was well known by you and by other barons, but because I have left the court I am known no longer, and put in forgetfulness, which I ought not to be if faith reigned in the world. When Sir Gawain heard the voice which spake to him thus, he thought it was Merlin, and he answered, Sir, certes I ought to know you well, for many times have I heard your words; I pray you appear before me so that I may be able to recognize you. Ah sir, said Merlin, you will never see me more, and that grieves me, but I cannot remedy it; and when you shall have departed from this place, I shall never more speak to you nor to any other person, save only my mistress; for never other person will be able to discover this place for any thing which may befall; neither shall I ever go out from hence, for in the world there is no such strong tower as this wherein I am confined; and it is neither of wood, nor of iron, nor of stone, but of air, without any thing else; and made by enchantment so strong, that it can never be demolished while the world lasts, neither can I go out, nor can any one come in, save she who hath inclosed me here, and who keeps me company when it pleaseth her; she cometh when she listeth, for her will is here. How, Merlin, my good friend, said Sir Gawain, are you restrained so strongly that you cannot deliver yourself, nor make yourself visible unto me; how can this happen, seeing that you are the wisest man in the world? Rather, said Merlin, the greatest fool; for I well knew that all this would befall me, and I have been fool enough to love another more than myself, for I taught my mistress that whereby she hath imprisoned me in such manner that none can set me free. Certes, Merlin, replied Sir Gawain, of that am I right sorrowful, and so will King Arthur, my uncle, be, when he shall know it, as one who is making search after you throughout all countries. Well, said Merlin, it must be borne, for never will he see me, nor I him; neither will any one speak with me again after you, it would be in vain to attempt it: for you yourself, when you have turned away, will never be able to find the place; but salute for me the king and the queen, and all the barons, and tell them of my condition. You will find the king at Carduel in Wales; and when you arrive there you will find there all the companions who departed with you, and who at this day will return. And be not discomforted because of that which hath befallen you, for you will find the damsel who cast this adventure upon you in the forest where you found her; but forget not to salute her. Sir, said Sir Gawain, that shall I not forget, if God please. Now then, said Merlin, go in the name of God, who will protect and save the King Arthur, and the realm of Logres, and you also, as the best knights who are in the world. With that Sir Gawain departed joyful and sorrowful; joyful because of what Merlin had assured him should happen unto him, and sorrowful because that Merlin had thus been lost. T. 2. f. 146.

This is the account of Merlin’s fate, which, according to Miss Plumtre, is current at this time among the Bretons. Some of their traditions say, that he is still alive, enclosed in a tree by the power of a greater enchanter than himself. The exact spot no one knows for certain: though it is somewhere near his birth-place, which they affirm was in the isle of Sein, a little islet off the western coast of Bretagne, between the points of Raz and of Croissant.

Prophecies of Merlin. § X.]—The latest book upon this subject is that by Thomas Heywood, a man whose dramatic pieces contain passages of exquisite beauty, and whose other works, voluminous as they are, are nearly worthless. It is entitled “The Life of Merlin surnamed Ambrosius. His Prophecies and Predictions interpreted; and their truth made good by our English Annals. Being a Chronographical History of all the Kings, and memorable passages of this Kingdom, from Brut to the Reign of our Royall Sovereigne King Charles. A Subject never pub-shed in this kind before, and deserves to be knowne and observed by all men.

London: Printed by J. Okes, and are to be sold by Jasper Emery, in Pauls Church-yard, at the signe of the Eagle and Child, neare St. Austins Gate. 1641." (Small 4to.)

"Courteous and considerate reader," says Heywood, "I have here exposed to thy especiall perusal, the life and prophesies of our famous predictor Merlinus, surnamed Ambrosius, who though he lived in the time of profane paganism, was a professed Christian, and therefore his auguries the better to be approved and allowed.—Scarce any thing shall be here wanting to thy best wishes, if thou beest desirous to be instructed and faithfully informed in the knowledge of our English Annals: For in the stead of a large study book, and huge voluminous Tractate, able to take up a whole year in reading, and to load and tire a porter in carrying, thou hast here a small Manuell, containing all the pith and marrow of the greater, made portable for thee (if so thou please) to bear in thy pocket, so that thou mayst say, that in this small compendium or abstract thou hast Hollinshed, Polychronicon, Fabian, Speed, or any of the rest, of more giant-like bulk or binding; to which my short Abbreviary, I strive to make this my Prologue or Preface to thee alike suitable, being as succinct and briefly contrived, as the former summarily comprehended, desiring thee to read considerately, and withall to censure charitably, and so (without further compliment) wishing thy care in the one and courtesy in the other, with a favourable pardon of some few errors committed in the press, I bid thee farewell."

This is a serious and dull attempt to trace the fullfilment of Merlin's prophecies in the course of English history! The most amusing passage which it contains is an invention of his own fancy—for I believe it is not to be found elsewhere.

"As Merlin was plentifully indued with the spirit of divination, so by some authours it is affirmed of him that hee was skilful in dark and hidden arts, as magick, necromancy, and the like, and they relate of him, that when King Vortigen lived solitary in his late erected castle, forsaken of the greatest part of his followers and friends, and quite sequestered from all kingly honours, hee grew into a depe and dumpish melancholy, delighting onely (if any delight can be taken therein) in solitude and want of company, to expell which sad fits from him, which might bee dangerous to impair his health, he would devise for his recreation and disport many pleasant fancies to beget mirth and sometimes laughter, by so-lacing his ear with several strains of musique both courtly and rural; the sound heard, but the persons not seen; as with the harpe, bag-pipes, cimball, and tabret; and sometimes again with the lute, orpharian, viall, sackbut, cornet, and organs; then to recreate his eye, hee would present him with stately masques and anti-masques; and againe, for variety sake, with rustick dances presented by swains and shephardesses: and where these grew any thing stale or tedious to his eye or ear, he would take him up into the top of one of his turrets, whereon hee should see eagles and hawkes fly after sundry games, and what fowle the king liked they would strike it into his lap, to add unto his slender provision for dinner and supper, which gave the king no small contentment.

"Sometimes hee would have an hare, or hart hunted and chased by a pack of dogges in the ayre, the game flying, the hounds with open and audible mouthes pursuing, with huntsmen winding their horns, and following the chase with all the indents and turnings, losses and recoveries, the champaigne plaines, the woods, and coverts appearing as visible and naturall as if the sport had been upon the firmes and solid earth.

"Upon a time being in the kings summer parlour, who was desirous to bee partaker of some novelty which hee had never seen, there instantly appeared upon the table a paire of butts, and whites in the middle to shoote at, when suddenly came in sise dapper and pert fellows like archers, in stature not above a foot high, and all other members accordingly proportioned; their bowes were of the side bones of an overgrown pike, their strings of a small slevy silk, no bigger than the thread of a cobweb, their arrows less then pick-tooths, feathered with the wings of small flyes, and headed with the points of Spanieth needles, who made a shew as if they were to shoote a match three to three, and roundly they went about it: in the middle of the game, there was a shot which rested doubtfull, which as it appeared, the gamesters could not well decide: then Merlin called to one of the servants (who had something a big nose) that stood by, and bade him measure to the marke, and give it to the best: To which whilst he stooped, and inclined his face, the better to umpire the matter, one of these pigney archers who had an arrow to shoote delivered it from his bow, and shot him quite through the nose, at which he started, and the king heartily laughed, (for there was no room to be seen); and the butts with the archers together disappeared." Heywood's Life of Merlin, page 27.

It has evidently been written at very different times, and with very different purposes. § X.]—There is a curious passage upon this subject in the Cronica del Conde Don Pero Niño: it occurs in the advice given him by his tutor. The good Fidalgo, to whose care he was entrusted, says, "Take heed that you believe not in false prophecies, nor place confidence in them, such as those of Merlin and others; for I tell you a truth, these things have been invented and forged by designing and crafty men, to obtain favour with kings and great lords, and to get riches from them, and have them at their pleasure by means of the vain belief which they made their profit. And if you examine into the matter, you will find that when a new king comes, forthwith they make a new Merlin: they say that this king is to cross the sea, and destroy the whole Morisma (the collective body of the Mahommedans) and win the Holy Sepulchre, and be made emperor; and afterwards we see that what God pleases comes to pass. Thus they have said of the kings who are past, and thus they will say of those who are to come. That which God was not pleased to reveal to his chosen servant, sinners pretend to know. The true prophets spake only with relation to the twocomings of Jesus Christ, his first coming in humility and poverty, his second in power and majesty. And farther they are all silent, for after the coming of Christ they are not necessary. Merlin was a good man, and a right wise. He was not the son of the devil, as some affirm; for the devil, who is a spirit, cannot engender children: he may provoke actions which are sinful, for this is his office. He is an incorporeal substance; he cannot engender what is corporeal. But Merlin, with the great science which he had acquired, wished to know more than he behoved, and he was deceived by the devil, who told him many things that he should say, and some of these proved true; for this is the manner of the devil, and indeed of every one who practises deceit; to bring forward some truth which may be believed by him whom he seeks to entrap. Thus yonder in England he said some things which were found to have some truth in them; but in many others he failed; and persons now who wish to say certain things of this kind invent them, and say that they were spoken by Merlin." P. 29—30.

The practice of inventing prophecies was carried on with singular industry by the Braganzan party during the Spanish usurpation of Portugal, and gave rise to the Sebastianists.

Merlin gives a bad character of the French. Sachez que pour leur nécessité et pour leur orgueil seront mauvaisement aimés parmy le monde a celuy temps. And again he speaks of leur chétive nation, and of celuy mauvais sang quils auront dedans leur ventre. Prophecies, f. 18.

Lancelot. § XI.]—Our Cymric antiquaries make, I believe, no claim to Sir Lancelot, either historical or mythological. Whitaker of Manchester, however, makes out a history for him. The name of Lancelot, he says, "is an appellative truly British, and significative of royalty; Lance being a Celtic term for a spear (Diodorus, p. 353. and Varro, Durdrecht, 1609. p. 25. Fragmenta) and Leod, Lod, or Lot, importing a people. He was therefore a British sovereign.—(Therefore!)" And since he is denominated Lancelot of the Lake, perhaps he resided at Coccium in the region Linuis, and was the monarch of Lancashire; as the kings of the Creones, living at Selma in the forest of Morven, are generally denominated sovereigns of Morven (1) or more probably was king of Cheshire, and resided at Pool-ton Lancelot in the hundred of Wirral." Hist. of Manchester, vol. 2. 51.

Thomas of Ercildoune. § XII.]—The Tristran of Gotfret von Stras- burc, which the Germans refer to the 13th century, appeals to this poet as its original. I quote the passage for the use of those who can understand it: the task is not facilitated by the preposterous manner in which this collection of German romances has been printed, with a full stop at the end of every line, and no other punctuation.

Welshin probably means French. There are some parts of Germany wherein this name is still applied to the French; and others in which it is used for the Italians.

Tristram, a mythological character. § XII.]—By the character of Trystan, Mr. Davies says, we are to understand, as his name imports, a herald of mysteries. He is the proclaimer, the son of Taliesin, the overwhelming—that is, the deluge! King March is a horse; “Easyt, whose name, spectacle, or subject of steady contemplation, manifestly implies some mystical exhibition, was the wife of the horse, so she is described as having a white mane. She was therefore a mare.” And as “Mr. Bryant acknowledges Hippa, the mare, as one of the most ancient goddesses of the Gentile world, and particularly informs us that the Arkite Ceres was distinguished by that title, and her priestesses were called Hippai mares;" it follows the romance of Tristram is an Arkite story, and that his adulterous and incestuous intercourse with Essylt alludes to "the incorporation of the primitive religion of the Britons with the rites of the Phenician cow!—What can be wilder than all this? But Mr. Davies is not the only learned man who has followed an hypothesis like a will of the wisp, wherever it would lead him.

Meliadus. § XIll.]—The following passage from the beginning of this Romance pretends to give much bibliographical information.

"Bien est verite que aucun ses pseuhommes cleres se sont ja entremis de traduyer ce livre de latin en langue Francoys. Premier messire Lucis du Jauqui fut le premier chevalier qui de ce sentremist, & que son estude y mist & sa cure; aussi traduiz en langue Francoys une partie de l'histoire de monsieur Tristan & moins assas que il ne deust. Moulz commenga bien son livre, & si ny mist tous les faits de monsieur Tristan, ains la greigneur partie. Apres son entremist messire Gasses le blanc qui estoit parent au Roy Henry, & desirait l'histoire de Lancelot du las; et d'autre chose ne parla il mie grandement en son livre. Messire Robert de borron son entremist & Helge de borron par la priere dudit messire Robert de borron, & pour que compaignons feusmes darmes longuement, je commencay mon livre du bruit. Et quant je leus meno jusques a la fin, ainsie comme il appert encore, le roy Henry a qui mon livre eust tant pleu comme joye compte, quant il eust regarde des le commencement jusques a la fin, pourquoy il eust ouy tous les autres livres qui du livre du saint Graal estoient extraits en Francoys devant lui, & le mien & les autres les eust tous & encore nostoient mie du tout les livres de latin en francois traduyes, ains en estoit demourant a traduyer une grant partie: pourquoy voulut il que je m'enmierisse a mon pouvoir de mener a fin ce que es auttres livres defoillaiz."

There is a passage of the same kind at the beginning of Gyron.

"Seigneurs, Empereurs, Roys, Princes, Ducs, Contes, Barons, Chevaliers, Vicomtes, Bourgeois, et tous les pseudhommes de cestuy monde qui taiens acs et desir de vous detruet en romans, prenez cestuy cy, et le faictes lire de chef en chef, si orres partie de totes les grandes aventures qui adviendront jadis aux chevaliers errans du temps du Roy Uterpendragon et du temps du Roy Arius son fils. Et saiches tout vraiement que cestuy livre fut translate du livre de Monseigneur Edouart le Roy dangleterre en cellay tempe que il passa oultre la mer, au service de nostre seigneur pour conqueter le saint sepulcre. Et maistre Rusticien de Puisse compila ce romrant. Car dicelui livre au Roy Edouart dangleterre translata il toutes les merveilleuses aventures qui sont en cestuy livre.

In Gyron le Courtoys Spenser probably found the original of his Drag-gadochio. § XIV.] Hennor de la Selve is the name of this hero. Spenser has not gone to the same source for his Knight of Courtesy. Calidore appears to be his own creation.

A writer in the British Bibliographer (No. 13. p.159.) has asserted that "in vain would any person search for the Florisel of the Winter's Tale in Amadis of Greece," and therefore that Mr. Southey "is hardly warranted in stating that Shakespear had imitated this romance."

I give this writer more credit for accuracy than he has given me. He has used the French translation, and according to that translation is, I dare say, justified in his assertion;—but a reference to the original would have shown him that I am perfectly accurate in mine. The latter chapters relate to the loves of Florisel and Silvia; and these the French translator may probably have removed to the ninth book of the series.

Sidney and Spenser may both be traced to the romance of Florisel de Niquesa, as well as to Amadis of Greece. The mock execution which is exhibited before Pamela will be found Book 1. ch. 14. of the original Spanish; and the origin of Amoret in her sufferings, Book 2. ch. 5.

Hyperboles in Gyron le Courtoys concerning the elder knights. § XIV.] The most extravagant of these stories relate to Febus, Gyron's great grandfather; perhaps the phrase which the French apply to a style of extravagant bombast may have originated from this exaggerated character.

Perlevaux. § XV.] Two etymologies are given of this name: they are equally ridiculous.

"On lappelloit Perlevaux, mais le bon hermite son oncle luy avoit mis a nom Farluyfait pour ce quel cestoit fait par lui mesmes."—Saint Grenall, 2. f. 149.

"Beau fils vous avez nom Perlevaux pource que avant que fusses ne, il
The dialect of Picardy, in which some writers have supposed that Amadis of Gaul was originally written. [§ XVI.] There is the most conclusive evidence, internal and external, that this famous romance was written in Portuguese. The only ground for a different opinion is an assertion of D’Herberay, who remembered he had seen a MS. of it in the Picard dialect, supported by Tressan, who is almost sure that he had seen this MS. not in the Picard but in Romance, among Queen Christina’s books in the Vatican.

That Lobeira’s work should have been translated at the court of Burgundy is exceedingly probable, a princess of Portugal having married Philip the Good. There was a Portuguese at that court, by name Vaz de Lucena, who might very probably have made this translation among his other works. Olivier de la Marche regrets that he has not “par don de grace, la clergie, la memoire, ou l’entendement, de ce vertueux Escuyer, Vaz de Lucane, Portugalois, a present echanson de Madame Marguerite d’Angleterre, Duchesse Duvalière de Bourgongue; lequel a fait tant d’oeuvres, translations et autres biens, dignes de memoire, qu’il fait aujourd’huy à estimer entre les sachans, les experimentes, et les recommandes de nostre temps.”—Introduction, p. 5.

Was the Morte Arthur compiled in French or in English? [§ XVII.]—A passage in the beginning of the sixth book implies that the compilation was in French, and Sir Thomas Malory only the translator.—“Sir Launcelot increased marvellously in worship and in honour, therefore he is the first knight that the French book maketh mention of after King Arthur came from Rome.”

The title also appears to warrant a like inference. I believe all the poems with a French title which are printed with Chaucer’s works are translations from that language.

Nuno Alcoares Pereira. [§ XVII.]—Francisco Rodriguez Lobo says, in the Corte na Aldea, “There was a brave captain in Portugal, better than whom Rome never produced, who, by imitating a knight of romance, and copying the virtues which were written of him, became the greatest of his time." This passage alludes to Nuno Alvarez, upon whose exploits Lobo has written a poem in 20 cantos: and there he relates the fact.

Lia neste exercicio costumado

Do casto Dom Galaz, claro, esforçado, Honra e valor da antiqua corte Ingreza, Vitorioso sempre e celebrado

Que ate a morte ser casto determina.

Dispoem, ordenam, movem, facilitam.

Move hum animo illustre a santa vida.
   O Condestable de Portugal, f. 19.

Lobo perhaps had seen the romance, as he states it to be written in Portuguese;—the fact he found in the Chronicle of Nuno Alvarez, where this book is said to have been a summary of the Round Table History—like the Morte Arthur. The passage is as follows:

Avia gram sabor, e usava muyto de ouvir, e leer libros destorías, espe-cialmente usava mais leer a estoria de Galaaz em que se continha a soma da
The present edition. § XVIII.—It may perhaps not be improper to remark that the present edition was projected and undertaken by a gentleman, who, for reasons which it is not necessary to explain, withdrew from the undertaking. The present editor is not responsible for the mechanical part; nor is it to be supposed, that under any circumstances he would have undertaken such a responsibility; but he knows that neither expense nor care have been spared to render it minutely accurate. The superintendence of the press was undertaken by Mr. Upcott of the London Institution; and the reprint is rendered as exact as possible, there being no other alteration than that of the type.

Chivalry was in its noon-day glory under Edward III. § XIX.—A remarkable instance of Edward's wide-spread reputation as the patron of chivalry is related by Joshua Barnes in his history of that prince. "Now it is to be noted, that in these days (1350) there was hot war between the Soldan of Babylon and Constantine, King of Armenia, the former invading the King of Armenia's dominions with vast and numerous armies, and the latter endeavouring by the united strength of his own subjects, the Cypriotes and Rhodians, to repel the violence of the said heathen invaders, or at least to stop their progress, which then began to threaten all Christendom. Among the several great men, who together with the Christian princes were engaged in this holy war, whereof Hugh, the valiant King of Cyprus, was the most notable, there was a Cypriote knight, named John de Vescoti, of the King of Cyprus his blood, and a knight of France, called Thomas de la Marche, bastard brother to John de Valois, the French king; both who had a considerable command in the Christian army. It so fell out, that John de Vescoti laid flat treason to the charge of the bastard of France, namely, that he had secretly appointed, in consideration of a certain sum of gold, to be paid unto him beforehand, in part of a greater sum to be paid afterward, to betray the Christian army to the Turks. The defendant strenuously denied the charge, which the appellant as eagerly urged; but there was no other proof on either side, save only their single assertions. Whereupon a challenge being denounced and accepted between the parties, the Christian captains, fearing either to displease the King of Cyprus, or the King of France, to whom they were allied; or at least doubting some dissent might happen thereupon among themselves by reason of part-taking on either side, made them both swear to stand to their award, as it should be determined by the confederates in council. The judgment was, that they should take and carry letters, importing their cause fully and clearly, from the said Christian princes unto King Edward of England, and to submit themselves to be tried by combat before him, as the most worthy and honourable prince in all Christendom, they swearing to remain as perfect friends until that time.

"As it was determined, so these generous knights performed, and came into England in the beginning of September; and forthwith presented their letters unto King Edward in the names of the Kings of Armenia and Cyprus, and the rest of the princes and captains of the Christians, containing the whole difference between them, and that they were to determine the matter by combat before him, as their judge. And then again Sir John de Vesconti openly before the king began to accuse Sir Thomas de la Marche of the treasonable intent and purpose aforesaid, challenging to prove it upon his body, and thereupon flung down his gauntlet; which the said Sir Thomas as boldly took up, and accepted the challenge in proof of his innocence. King Edward having read the letters, and seriously considered the whole matter, set them a day, namely, the fourth of October, being the Monday after St. Michael, wherein to decide their quarrel in close field within the lists at his palace of Westminster. On the day appointed they met accordingly, armed at all points, on horseback, the King, the Prince of Wales, and the whole court of England being spectators. There present, upon sound of trumpet, began a most gallant combat between these two gentlemen, for at the tilt both their spears brake on each other's shield, yet neither of them was moved from his saddle; wherefore, as it were by consent, they both alighted at one instant, and renewed the combat on foot, till, having, with equal valour and discretion, fought a considerable while, both their weapons were rendered useless, and they were obliged to come to close grapple, till, by wrestling, both fell locked together, still contending for the victory. Now the visors of both their helmets were defended before with small distant bars of steel, through which they might see and breathe more freely, all the rest of their bodies being wholly covered with armour: wherefore Sir Thomas de la Marche, the knight of France, who only of the two had certain short but sharp pricks of steel, called gadlings *, enclosed in the joints of his right gauntlet, struck therewith at the visor of Sir John de Vesconti, as often as he could come at him, and grievously tormented him in the face; insomuch, that being himself unprovided of the like gadlings, he was forced through extremity of pain to cry out aloud, as one that could not help himself. At that, King Edward flung down his wardour, and the marshal cried ho, and so the combat ceased; the King adjudging the victory to the Frenchman, and the vanquished to be at his mercy according to the law of arms.” Barnes.

Tournament. § XX.]—Tournaments were more dangerous in France than in Spain, but only because they were more disorderly.

“The French,” says the chronicler of Pero Nino, “joust in a different guise from what they do in Spain, justan sin tela à manera de guerra por el topar (if I understand this passage rightly, it means that they encounter as they would do in actual war, the difference being only in the point of the weapon.) They arm the horses with head pieces and breastings of leather, which are very strong, and the saddles are full strong, and cover the leg almost down to the foot. It often happens that the horses encounter and both fall; or one falls, and presently the other. It is a perilous manner of jousting, all men do not attempt it, but such as are expert, and right good horsemen. The lances are all measured, only one or two masters in the court make them, and this with license from the governor, i aquest et el fidel, and upon their warranty they are taken. There is no maintainer of the lists there, nor does one single out another for jousting, but jousts with whomsoever he can meet. All are knights adventurers, ten, or twenty, or thirty, or more arrange themselves on one side, and as many on the other. When one takes a spear, another has his ready, and not one alone comes against him; but it happens in their eagerness that two or even three start, notwithstanding their courtesy, for if they perceived it, not more than one would advance. The knight therefore who jousts there had need be well practised, and strong, and a great horseman.” P. 129.

At a tournament held at Valladolid in 1428, the King of Castile had twelve knights with him, who personated—the twelve Apostles. The twelve Apostles taking part in a tournament! "He exerted himself in his own person, and did good things in that sport, he and his companions against more than an hundred knights, who had much trouble with them, for they gave enough to do with all, and had with them as many careers as they chose. And because the truth ought not to be concealed, but should be written and kept in remembrance, Pero Niño was one of the twelve knights who were made in memory of the twelve apostles, and he was called St. Paul!" Cronica del Conde D. Pero Nino, p. 208.

After this, the reader will not be surprised by the following poem, addressed to St. Peter. Antonio Perez is the author, and it is transcribed from the Cancioneiro General, f. 194.

Vos preciosa piedra entera hallada para fundar, fuestes quien Dios quiso dar su mismo yelmo y cinera, acabando el de justar;
dio os la cruz que fue su lança, hizos su mantenedor, pues que santo aquesto alcança, y llevaya de justador la fe por mas alabança.

Con esta fe que ganastes en esta justa de guerra, con ella misma tornastes, y nuevamente justastes, y ganastes cielo y tierra: distes tan reio el encuentro que vuestra lança se mete toda hasta el fin del centro, lleno visera y almete saco la llave de dentro.

Ya que oivistes bien justado Dios sacratissimo padre viendo lo que avey ganado, desposo os con nuestra madre y asi quedastes casado.

The prowess of the knights of romance not greatly exaggerated. § XX.
—K. Arthur has related to the Bon Chevalier sans pasour, how K. Meladus by his single prowess rescued him from twenty knights, who were leading him away prisoner. "Quant le roy Artus eut fine son compte le bon chevalier sans pasour parle adoncques, & dit au roy Artus, Sire ainsi va il des adventures du monde, chacun fait ce qui peut, puis que ce vient au grant bevoing. Sire si dieu vous doint bonne adventure, vous semble il que ce faust grant fait a savoy que le feist? Sire, dit le roy Artus, se maist dieu il me semble que ce fuit grant fait, & moult perilleux a entreprendre, & non mie seule-lement grant, mais trop grant. Sire, fait le bon chevalier sans pasour, si dieu me doint bonne adventure je vous tiens pour le present pour le plus sage homme du monde, & pour le plus sage princ que soit pour le present en tout le monde de votre sage, mais ce dire je ne vous tiens mie pour sage. Qui metroit vingt aigneaulx dune part seulement, & mist on ung lyon entre eux, si le lyon les mettoit a mort, & les devoroit, luy tourneroit on a pouresse? Nency, certes, dit le roy Artus. Sire de ceste partie vous veult je mesmes dire, vous veultes en une place encontre ung lyon des aigneaulx; car bien sachex tout certainement de collye de quoy vous parlez entre tous les autres chevaliers, celyx fuit moult petit faict de mettre vingt chevaliers encontre luy; car ce ne luy estancha gueres sa faim, ce ne luy fuit que une goulee." Meliadus, ch. 51. f. 77.

"When King Arthur had finished his tale, the good knight without fear spake then, and said to King Arthur, Sir, thus it goes with the adventures of the world, every one does what he can when it comes to a matter of need. Sir, as God may give you good adventure, does it appear to you that this was a great feat for him who did it? Sir, said King Arthur, as God shall have me, it seems to me that it was a great feat, and full perilous to undertake; and not only great, but too great. Sir, said the good knight without fear, as God may give me good adventure, I hold you at present for the wisest man in the world, and for the wisest prince at this time in all the world of your age, but this saying I do not hold for wise. For put twenty lambs on one part, and set one single lion among them, if the lion put them to death and devoured them, would it be accounted for prowess? Certes not, said King Arthur. Sir, I will say the same to you of this affair: ye see lambs against a lion: for be assured of him of whom you speak, among all other knights, it is a little thing to set twenty knights against him; for it would not appease his hunger, it would be only a mouthful."

Pleasant however as the manners of chivalry might be for one of the lion race, there is some good sense in what Kehedin said to Palamedes, when that good knight proposed that he should bear him company, and seek adventures in the realm of Logres. "Sire, saiist Kehedin, grand mercy, mais de ce que vous dites que je vois avec vous cherchant les aventures du royaume de Logres m'est il aduis que vous maymez; mais cest petit; car ce nest pas feste de faire tel mestier, car vous que estes ung des bons chevaliers du monde, ne pouez gueres trouver plus forti que vous, et moy qui suis ung si foible homme comme pourrois je avec vous ce jeu fournir. Je ne voy pas, si Dieu me saulte, es batailles du royaume de Logres si grant proufft que je nayme mieulx ma peau salme que rampue despues et de glayees, je vous clame quitte les aventures du royaume de Logres. Car je voy bien que le greneu gaign qui y soit ceste de batre, occire et mehaignier lung lautre, pour ce ne me semble il pas beau. Je nayme pas le pays ou les chevaliers par comtume quant ils sentre-trewvent et ils sentredroyent saluer, et ils sentrebastent et occient; oncques mai ne ouys parler de tel salut. Dieu me gard de telles accointances!" Tristam, f. 109.

"Gramercy, Sir, cried Kehedin; by what you say that I should go with you seeking adventures in the kingdom of Logres, I perceive you love me; but it is but little; for it is no holyday to carry on such a business. You who are one of the good knights of the world, cannot find a stronger than yourself; and I who am so weak a man, how can I keep up the game with you? As God shall save me, I see no such great profit in the battles of the kingdom of Logres that I should not rather have my skin whole, than broken with swords and spears. I cry quit to you for the adventures of the kingdom of Logres. For I plainly see that the greatest gain there, is to beat, and kill, and maim one another; and therefore it likes me not. I do not love a country where when knights meet, and ought to salute, they encounter and fight and kill one another. I never heard of such kind of salutation. God keep me from such acquaintances!"

FTER that I had accomplishd and frynshed dyuers hystories as wel of contemplacyon as of other hystoryal and worldly actes of grete conquerours & prynes. And also certeyn bookes of ensaumplys and doctrine. Many noble and dyuers gentylmen of thys royalm of Englonde camen and demanded me many and oftymes, wherfore that I haue not do made & enprynte the noble hystorye of the saynt greal, and of the moost renomed crysten Kyng. Fryst and chyef of the thre best crysten and worthy, kyng Arthur, whyche ought moost to be remembred emonge vs englosshe men tofore al other crysten kynges. For it is notoyrly knowne thorugh the vnyuersal world, that there been ix worthy & the best that euer were. That is to wete thre paynyms, thre Jewes and thre crysten men. As for the paynyms they were tofore the Incarnacyon of Cryst, whiche were named, the fyrst Hector of Troye, of whome hystorye is comen bothe in balade and in prose. The second Aly: saunder the grete, & the thyrd Julyus Cezar Emperour of Rome of whome hystoryes ben wel kno and had. And as for the thre Jewes whyche also were tofore thyncarnacyon of our lord of whome the fyrst was Duc Josue whyche brought the chyldren of Israel to the londe of byheste. The second Davyd kyng of Jherusalem, & the thyrd Judas Machabeus of these thre the byble rebercheth al theyr noble hystories & actes. And sythe the sayd Incarnacyon haue ben thre noble crysten men stalled and admytted thorugh the vnyuersal world in to the nombres of the ix beste & worthy, of whome was fyrest the noble Arthur, whose noble actes I purpose to wryte in thys present book here folowyn. The second was Charlemayn or Charles the grete, of whom th smalltorye is had in many places bothe in frenshe and englyshe, and the thyrde and last was Godefray of boloyne, of whom actes & lyf I made a book vnto the excellent prynce and kyng of noble memorey kyng Edward the fourth, the sayd noble Jentrymen instantly requyred me tempynte thstorye of the sayd noble kyng and conquyrouer kyng Arthur, and of his knayghtes wyth thstorye of the saynt greal, and of the deth and endyng of the sayd Arthur. Affermyng that I oust rather tenpynyte his actes and noble festes, than of godefray of boloyne, or ony of the other eyght, consevynge that he was a man borne wythin this roysame and kyng and Emperour of the same.

And that there ben in freynshe dyuers and many noble volumes of his actes, and also of his knayghtes. To whome I answerd, that dyures men holde oppynyon, that there was no suche Arthur, and that alle suche bookees as been manad of hym, ben but saynede and fables, by cause that somme cronyles make of hym no mencyon ne remembre hym noo thynge ne of his knayghtes. Wherto they answerd, and one in specyal sayd, that in hym that shold say or thynke, that there was never suche a kyng calld Arthur, myght wel be aretted grete folye and blyndenessse. For he sayd that there were many euydences of the contrarye. Fyrst ye may see his sepulture in the monasterie of Glastyngburye. And also in polycronycon in the v boke the sxtte chappytte, and in the seuenthe book the xxxiii chappytte, where his body was buryed and after founden and translated in to the sayd monasterie, ye shal se also in thistorye of boches in his book de casa principum, parte of his noble actes, and also of his falle. Also galfrydus in his brutyshe book recounteth his lyf, and in dyuers places of Englon, many remembraunces ben yet of hym and shall remayne perpetually, and also of his knayghtes. Fyrst in the abbey of Westmestre at seynt Edwardes shryne remaynethe the prynte of his seal in reed waxe closed in beryll. In whych is wryton Patricius Arthurus, Britanniæ, Galliæ, Germaniæ, dacie, Imperator. Item in the castel of doner ye may see Gauwayns skulle, & Cradoks mantel. At Wynchester the rounde table, in other places Launce-lottes swerde and many other thynges. Themne al these thynges consydered there can no man resonably gaynssaye but there was a kyng of thyss lande named Arthur. For in al places crysten and hethen he is reypeted and takene for one of the ix worthy. And the fyrst of the thre Crysten men. And also he is more spoken of beyonde the see moo bookes made of his noble actes than there be in england as wel in duche ytalyen spanyshe and grekushe as in frensashe. And yet of record remayne in wytnesse of hym in Waleis in the toune of Camelot the grete stones & meruaylous werkys of yron lyeng vnder the grounde & ryal vautes which dyuers now lyuyng hath seen. Wherfor it is a meruayl why he is no more renomed in his owne contreye, sauf onelye it accordethe to the word of god, whyche sayth that no man is accept for a prophete in his owne contreye. Theñe al these thynges forsayd aledged I coude not wel denye, but that there was suche a noble kyng named arthur, and reputed one of the ix worthy, & fyrst & chyef of the cristen men, & many noble volumes be made of hym & of his noble knyxtes in frensashe which I haue seen & redde beyonde the see, which been not had in our maternal tongue, but in walshe ben many & also in frensashe, & somme in englyshe but no wher nygh alle. Wherfore suche as haue late ben drawn oute bryefly in to englyshe, I haue after the symple connyng that god hath sente to me, vnder the favoure and correctyon of al noble lوردes and gentylmen enprysed to enprynte a book of the noble hystoryes of the sayd kyng Arthus, and of certeyn of his knyghtes after a copye vnto me delyuered, whyche copye Syr Thomas Malorye dyd take oute of certeyn bookes of frensashe and reduced it in to Englyshe. And I accordyng to my copye haue doen sette it in enprynte, to the entente that noble men may see and lerne the noble acts of chyualrye, the jentyl and vertuous dedes that somme knyghtes vaed in tho dayes, by whyche they came to honour, and how they that were vycious were punysshed and ofte put to shame and rebuke, humbly byscyung al noble lوردes and ladyes wyth al other estates of what estate or degree they been of, that shal see and rede in this sayd book and werke, that they take the good and honest actes in their remembrancen, and to folowe the same. Wherin they shalle fynde many joyous and playsaunt hystoryes, and noble & renomed actes of humanyte, gentynenesse and chyualryes. For herein may be seen noble chyualrye, Curtosye, Humanyte, freundynesse, hardynesse, loue, freundshyp, Cowardyse, Murdre, hate, vertue, and synne. Doo after the good and leue the euyl, and it shal brynge you to good fame and renommee. And for to passe the tymne this book shal be plesaunte to rede in, but for to gyue sayth and byleue that al is trewe that is conteyned herin, ye be at your lyberete, but al is wryton for our doctryne, and for to beware that we falle not to vyce ne synne, but teexercyse and folowe vertu, by whyche we may come and atteyne to good fame and renomme in thys lyf, and after thys shorte and transytorye lyf to come vnto euerlastyng blysse in heuen, the whyche he graunt vs that reygneth in heuen the blessyd Trynyte. Amen.
HENNE to procede forth in thys sayd book, whych I dyrecte vnto alle noble prynces, lorde and ladys, gentylmen or gentylwymmen that desyre to rede or here rede of the noble and joyous hystorye of the grete conquour and excellent kyng, Kyng Arthur, somtyme kyng of thys noble royalme, thenne callyd brytaygne. Explicit the table.
Capitulum Primum.

IT befel in the dayes of Uther pendragon when he was kyng of all Englond, and so regned that there was a myzty duke in Cornewaill that helde warre ageynst hym long tyme. And the duke was called the duke of Tyntagil, and so by meanes kyng Uther send for this duk, chargyng hym to brynge his wyf with hym, for she was called a fair lady, and a passynge wyse, and her name was called Igrayne.

So whan the duke and his wyf were comyn vnto the kyng by the meanes of grete lordes they were accorded bothe, the kyng lyked and loued this lady wel, and he made them grete chere oute of mesure, and desyred to haue lyen by her. But she was a passynge good woman, and wold not asente vnto the kyng. And thence she told the duke her husband and said I suppose that we were sente for that I shold be dishonoured wherfor husband I councelle yow that we departe from hens sodenly that we maye ryde all nyghte vnto owre owne castell, and in lyke wyse as she saide so they departed, that neyther the kynge nor none of his counseill were ware of their departynge. Also soone as kynge Uther knewe of theire departynge soo sodenly, he was wonderly wrothe. Thenne he called to hym his pryuy counseille, and told them of the sodeyne departynge of the duke and his wyf.

Thenne they anysed the kynge to send for the duke and his wyf by a grete charge. And yf he wille not come at youre somës, thenne may ye do your best, thenne haue ye cause to make myghty wyre upon hym. Soo that was done and the messagers hadde their answere. And that was thys shortly, that neyther he nor his wyf wold not come at hym.

Thenne was the kynge wonderly wroth. And thenne the kynge sente hym playne word akeyne, and badde hym be redy and stiffe hym and garnyshe hym, for within xi dayes he wold fetche hym oute of the bygggest castel that he hath.

Whanne the duke hadde thys warrynge, anon he wente and furnysched and garnysched two stronge Castels of his of the whiche the one hyght Tyntagil, & the other castel hyzt Terrabyl. So his wyf Dame Igrayne he putte in the castell of Tyntagil. And hym self he putte in the castel of Terrabyl the whiche had many yssues and posternes oute. Thenne in all haste came Uther with a grete hoost, and leyd a seyege aboute the castel of Terrabil. And thorn he pyght many paulyons, and there was grete warre made on bothe partyes, and moche peple slayne. Thenne for pure angre and for grete loue of fayr Igrayne the kynge Uther felle seke. So came to the kynge Uther Syre Ulfius a noble knyght, and asked the kynge why he was seke. I shall telle the said the kynge, I am seke for angre and for loue of fayre Igrayne that I may not be hool, we my lord said Syre Ulfius, I shal seke Merlyn, and he shalle do yow remedy that youre herte shal be pleasyd. So ulfius departed, and by aduenture he mette Merlyn in a beggars aray, and ther Merlyn asked Ulfius whome he soughte, and he said he had lytyl ado to telle hym. Well saide Merlyn, I knowe whome thou sekest, for thou sekest Merlyn, therefore seke no ferther, for I am he, and yf kynge Uther wille wel rewarde me, and be sworne vnto me to fulfille my desyre that shall be his honour & profite more thã myn for I shalle cause hym to haue alle his desire. Alle this wyll I vndertake said Ulfius that ther shalle be nothyng resonable, but thow shalt haue thy desire, well said Merlyn, he shalle haue his entente and desire. And therefore saide Merlyn, ryde on your wey, for I wil not be long behynde.

Capitulum Secundum.

Thenne Ulfius was glad and rode on more than a pass till that he came to kyng Utherpendragon, and told hym he had met with Merlyn, where is he saide the kyng sir saide Ulfius he wille not dwelle long, ther with al Ulfius was ware where Merlyn stood at the porche of the pauelions dore. And thenne Merlyn was bounde to come to the kyng. Whan kyng Uther sawe him he said he was welcome, syr said Merlyn I knowe al your hert euery dele, so ye wil be sworn vnto me as ye be a true kyng enoyned to fulfille my desire ye shal haue your desire, thenne the kyng was sworne vpon the iii. euangelistes. Syre said Merlyn this is my desire, the first nynt ye ye shal lye by Igrayne ye shal gete a child on her & whan that is borne that it shal be deluyerd to me for to nourisse there as I wille haue it, for it shal be your worship, & the childis auaille as mykel as the child is worth. I wylle wel said the kyng as thow wilt haue it. Now make you redy said Merlyn this nyght ye shalle lye with Igrayne in the castel of Tyntigayll, & ye shalle be lyke the duke her husband Ulfius shal be lyke Syre Brastias, a knyghte of the dukes, And I wil be lyke a knyghte that hyghte Syr Jordanus a knyghte of the dukes. But wayte ye make not many questions with her nor her men, but saye ye are diseased and soo hye yow to bedde, and ryse not on the morne tyll I come to yow, for the castel of Tyntygail is but x myle hens, soo this was done as they decysed. But the duke of Tyntigail aspyed hou the kyng rode fro the suye of tarabil, & therfor that nyghte he yasned oute of the castel at a posterne for to haue distresssid the kynges hooste. And so thorowe his owne yssue the duke hymself was slayne or euery the kyng cam at the castel of Tyntigail, so after the deth of the duke kyng Uther lay with Igrayne more than thre houres after his deth, and begat on her that nygge arthur, & or day cam Merlyn ca to the kyng, & bad hym make hym redy, & so he kist the lady Igrayne and departed in all hast. But whan the lady herd telle of the duke her husbâd and by all record he was dede or euer kyng Uther came to her themne she merueilled who that myghte be that laye with her in lykenes of her lord, so she mourned pryuely and held hir pees. Themne alle the barons by one assent prayd the Kyng of accord betwixe the lady Igrayne and hym, the kyng gaf hem leue, for sayne wold he haue ben accorded with her. Soo the kyng put alle the trust in Ulfyus to entrete bitwene them so by the entrete at the last the kyng & she met to gyder. Now wilte we doo wel said Ulfyus, our kyng is a lusty knyghte and wyueles, & my lady Igrayne is a passyng fair lady, it were grete ioye vnto vs all and hit myghte please the kyng to make her his quene, vnto that they all well accorded and meued it to the kyng. And anone lyke a lusty knyghte, he assentid therto with good wille, and so in alle haste they were maryed in a mornynge with grete myrthe and Joye.

And Kyng Lott of Lowthian and of Orkenay thenne wedded Margawse that was Gaweyns moder. And kyng Nentres of the land of Garlot wedded Elayne. Al this was done at the request of kyng Uther. And the thrð syster morgan le fey was put to scale in a nonnery. And ther she lerned so moche that she was a grete Clarke of Nygromancy. And after she was wedded to kyng Uryens of the lond of Gore that was Syre Ewayns le blamente maynys fader.

Capitulum Tercium.

Thene quene Igrayne waxid dayly gretter & gretter, so it befel after within half a yere as kyng Uther lay by his quene he asked hir by the feith she ouzt to hym whoes was the child within her body, thene was she sore abashed to yeue answere. Desmaye you not said the kyng but telle me the trouthe, and I shall loue you the better by the feythe of my body. Syre saide she I shalle telle you the trouthe, the same nyghte y' my lord was dede the houre of his deth as his knysetes record ther came in to my castel of Tyntigaill a man lyke my lord in speche and in countenaunce, and two knyghtes with hym in lykenes of his two knyghtes barcias and Jordans, & soo I went vn to bed with hym as I ouz to do with my lord, & the same nyght as I shal answr vn to god this child was bagoten vpon me, that is trouthe saide the kynge as ye say, for it was I my self that cam in the lykenesse, & therfor desmay you not for I am fader to the child, & ther he told her alle the cause, how it was by Merlys counseil, theeme the quene made grete ioye whan she knewe who was the fader of her child. Sone come merlyn vn to the kynge, & sayd syr ye must purue yow, for the nourisshyng of your child, as thou wolt said the kynge be it, wel said Merlyn I knowe a lord of yours in this land that is a passyng true man & a feithful, & he shal haue the nourysshynge of your child, & his name is sir Ector, & he is a lord of fair lyuelode in many partyes in Englund & Walys, & this lord sir ector lete hym be sent for, for to come & speke with you, & desyre hym your self as he loueth you that he will put his owne child to nourisshyng to another woman, and that his Wyf nourishe yours. And whan the child is borne lete it be deluyed to me at yoder pryuy posterne vncreystned. So like as Merlyn deuyed it was done. And whan syre Ector was come, he made fyndone to the kynge for to nourissh the child lyke as the Kynge desyrede, and there the kynge graunted syr ector grete rewardys. Thenne when the lady was deluyerd the kynge com-maundde ii knyghtes & ii ladys to take the child bound in a cloth of gold, & that ye deluyer hym to what poure man ye mete at the posterne yate of the castel. So the child was deluyerd vn to Merlyn, and so he bare it forth vn to Syre Ector, and made an holy man to crysten hym, and named hym Arthur, and so sir Ectors wyf nourysshed hym with her owne pappe. Thenne within two yeres kynge Uther felle seke of a grete maladye. And in the meane whyle hys enemies vaunpped vpon hym, and dyd a grete batayle vpon his men, and slewe many of his peple. Sir said Merlyn ye may not lye so as ye doo, for ye must to the feld though ye ryde on an hors lyttar, for ye shal neuer haue the better of your enemies, but yf your persone be there, and thenne shal ye haue the victory. So it was done as Merlyn had deuyed, and they caryed the kynge forth in an hors lyttar with a grete hooste towarde his enemys. And at saynt Albons there mette with the kynge a grete hoost of the north. And that day Syre Ulfyus and sir Bracias dyd grete dedes of armes, and kynge Uthers men overcome the northerne batayle and slewe many peple & putt the remensaut to flight. And thenne the kynge retorned vnto london and made grete joyle of his vyctory. And thene he fyll passyng sore seke, so that thre dayes & thre nyghtes he was specheles. Wherfore alle the barons made grete sorow and asked Merlyn what counseill were best. There nys none other remedye said Merlyn but god wil haue his wille. But loke ye al Barons be before kynge Uther to morne, and god and I shalle make hym to speke. So on the morne alle the Barons with merlyn came to fore the kynge, thene Merlyn said aloud vnto kynge Uther, Syre shall your sore Arthur be kyng after your dayes of this realme with all the appertenaunce, thenne Utherpendragon tordned hym and said in herynge of them alle I gyue hym gods blessyng & myne, & byd hym pray for my soule, & rightenousaly & worshipfully that he clayme y* croune vpon forfeture of my blessyng, & therwith he yelde vp the ghost & thenne was he enterid as longed to a kynge. Wherfor the quene payre Igrayne made grete sorowe and alle the Barons. Thenn Merlyn wente to the archebishops of Cauterbury, and counceleld hym for to sende for alle the lordes of the reame, and alle the gentilmen of armes that they shold to london come by Cristmas vpon payne of cursyng. And for this cause y* Jhu that was borne on that nyghte that he wold of his grete mercy shewe some myracle, as he was come to be kyng of mankynde for to shewe somme myracle who shold be rightwys kyng of this reame. So the Archebishop by the aduys of Merlyn send for alle the lordes and gentilmen of armes that they shold come by crystmasse euem vnto london. And many of hem made hem clene of her lyf that her prayer myghte be the more acceptable vnto god. Soo in the grettest chirch of london whether it were Powlis or not the Fresneshe booke maketh no mencyon, alle the estates were longe or day in the chirche for to praye. And whan matyns & the first masse was done, there was sene in the chircheyard ayest the hyhe aultier a grete stone four square lyke vnto a marbel stone. And in mydes therof was lyke an Anuylde of stele a foot on hyghe, & theryn stack a fayre swerd naked by the poyn, and letters there were wryten in gold aboute the swerd that saiden thus, who so pulleth oute this swerd of this stone and anuyld, is rightwys kyng borne of all England.
Thenne the peple merucilled & told it to the Archebissop. I com-mande said tharchebissop that ye kepe yow within your chirche, and pray vnto god still that no man touche the suerd tyll the hyhe masse be all done. So whan all masses were done all the lorde wente to beholde the stone and the swerd. And whan they sawe the scripture, som assayed suche as wold haue ben kyng. But none myght stere the swerd nor meue hit. He is not here said the Arche-bissop that shall encheue the swerd but doubte not god will make hym knowen. But this is my counseill said the archebissop, that we letue puruey x knyxtes men of good fame, & they to kepe this swerd, so it was ordeyned, & thene ther was made a crye, y1 euer ma shold assay y1 wold for to wynne the swerd. And vpon newe yeers day the barons leta maake a Justes and a tournemye, that alle knyxtes that wold Juste or tourneye, ther myzt playe, & all this was ordeyned for to kepe the lorde to gyders & the comyns, for the Archebissop trusted, that god wold make hym knowe that shold wynne the swerd. So vpon newe yeres day whan the seruyce was done, the barons rode vnto the feld, some to Juste, & som to torney, & so it happe that syre Ector that had grete lyueode aboute london rode vnto the Justes, & with hym rode syr kaynus his sone & yong Arthur that was hys nourisshed broder, & syr kay was made knyzt at al halowmas aFORE. So as they rode to y1 Justes ward, sir kay had lost his suerd for he had lefte it at his faders lodgyng, & so he prayd yong-Arthur for to ryde for his swerd. I wyl wel said Arthur, & rode fast after y1 swerd, & whan he cam home, the lady & al were out to see the Joustyng, thenne was Arthur wroth & saide to hym self, I will ryde to the chircheyard, & take the swerd with me that stycketh in the stone, for my broder sir kay shall not be without a swerd this day, so whan he cam to the chircheyard sir Arthur aliz & tayed his hors to the style, & so he wente to the tent, & found no knyzes there, for they were atte Justyng & so he handled the swerd by the handes, and lizly & fierly pulled it out of the stone, & took his hors & rode his way vntyll he came to his broder sir kay, & delyuerd hym the swerd, & as sone as sir kay saw the swerd he wist wel it was the swerd of the stone, & so he rode to his fader syr Ector, & said, sire, loo here is the swerd of the stone, wherfor I must be kyng of thys land. When syre Ector beheld the swerd, he retorned aȝeyne & cam to the chirche, & there they alizte al thre, & wente in to the chirche. And anon he made sir kay to swere vpon a book, how he came to that swerd. Syr said sir kay by my broder Arthur for he brought it to me, how gate ye this swerd said sir Ector to Arthur, sir I will telle you, when I cam home for my broders swerd, I fond no body at home to delyuer me his swerd. And so I thought my broder syr kay shold not be swerdles, & so I cam hyder egerly & pulled it out of the stone withoute ony payn, found ye ony knyzes about this swerd seid sir ector. Nay said Arthur. Now said sir Ector to Arthur I vnderstâde ye must be kyng of this land. Wherfore I, sayd Arthur and for what cause. Sire saide Ector, for god wille haue hit soo for ther shold neuer man haue drawn oute this swerde, but he that shal be rightwys kyng of this land. Now lete me see whether ye can putte the swerd ther as it was, and pulle hit oute aȝeyne, that is no maystry said Arthur, and soo he put it in the stone, therwith alle Sir Ector assayed to pulle oute the swerd and faylled.

Capitulum Sextum.

Now assayed Syre Ector vnto Syre kay. And anon he pulled at the swerd with alle his myghte, but it wold not be. Now shal ye assayed Syre Ector to Arthur I wyll wel seid Arthur and pulled it out easilly. And therwith alle Syre Ector knelyd doune to the erthe and Syre Kay. Allas seid Arthur myne owne dere fader and broder why knele ye to me. Nay nay my lord Arthur, it is not so I was neuer your fader nor of your blood, but I wote wel ye are of an hyber blood than I wende ye were. And thenne Syre Ector told hym all how he was bitaken hym for to nourisse hym. And by whoos commandement, and by Merlyns delyuerauce.

Thenne Arthur made grete doole whan he ynderstood that Syre Ector was not his fader. Sir said Ector vnto Arthur wull ye be my good & gracious lord when ye are kyng, els were I to blame said arthur for ye are the man in the world that I am most be holdyng to, & my good lady & moder your wyf that as wel as her owne hath fostred me and kepte. And yf euer hit be goddes will that I be kynge as ye say, ye shall desyre of me what I may doo, and I shalle not faille yow, god forbede I shold faille yow. Sir said Sire Ector, I will aske no more of yow, but that ye wille make my sone your foster broder Syre Kay Senceall of alle your landes. That shalle be done said Arthur, and more by the feith of my body that neuer man shalle haue that office but he whyle he and I lyue. There with all they wente vnto the Archebishop, and told hym how the sword was encheued, and by whome, and on twelfth day alle the barons came thyder, and to aessay to take the sword who that wold essay. But there afore hem alle ther myghte none take it out but Arthur, wherfor ther were many lorde wroth And saide it was grete shame vnto them all and the reame to be ouer gouernyd with a boye of no hyghge blood borne, and so they fell oute at that tyme that it was put of tyll Candemas. And thenne alle the barons shold mete there aseyne, but alwey the x knyghtes were ordeyneyd to watche the sword day & nyzt, & so they sette a pauellone ouer the stone & y sword & fyue alwayes watched. Soo at Candemas many moo grete lorde camd came thyder for to haue wonne the swerde, but there myghte none preuaille. And right as Arthur dyd at Cristmasse, he dyd at Candemas and pulld oute the swerde easely wherof the Barons were sore agreed and put it of in delay till the hyghe feste of Eester. And as Arthur sped afores, so dyd he at Eester, yet there were some of the grete lorde had indignacion that Arthur shold be kyngge, and put it of in a delay tyll the feest of Pentecoste. Thenne the Archebishop of Caunterbury by Merlyns prouyence lete puruypey them of the best knyghtes that they myghte gete. And suche knyghtes as Utherpendragon loured best and moost trusted in his dayes. And suche knyghtes were put aboute Arthur as syr Bawdewyn of Bretayn, syre kaynes, syre Ulfyus, syre harcias. All these with many other were alwayes aboute Arthur day and nyghte till the feste of Pentecost.

Capitulum Septimum.

And at the feste of pentecost alle maner of men assaulted to pulle at the swerde that wold assay, but none myghte preuaille but Arthur, and pulled it oute afore all the lordes and comyns that were there, wherfore alle the comyns cryed at ones we wille haue Arthur vnto our kyng we wille put hym no more in delay, for we alle see that it is goddes wille that he shalle be our kyng. And who that holdeth ageynst it we wille slee hym. And therwith all they knelyd at ones both ryche and poure, and cryed Arthur mercy by cause they had delayed hym so longe, and Arthur foryarf hem, and took the swerd bitwene both his handes, and offred it vpon the aylter where the Archebissop was, and so was he made knyghte of the best man that was there. And so anon was the coronacyon made. And ther was he sware vnto his lordes & the comyns for to be a true kyng to stand with true Justyce fro thens forth the dayes of this lyf. Also thene he made alle lordes that holde of the croune to come in, and to do seruyce as they oughte to doo. And many compleynytes were made vnto sir Arthur of grete wronges that were done syn the dethe of kyng Uther, of many lordes that were bereued lordes, knyghtes, ladyes & gentilmen, wherfor kyng Arthur maade the londes to be yeuen ayeyne vnto them that oughte hem.

Whanne this was done that the kyng had stablished alle the countreyes aboute london, thenne he lette make Syr kay sencial of Englond, and sir Baudewyn of Bretayne was made Constable, and sir Ulfyus was made chamberlayn. And sire Brastias was maade wardeyn to wayte vpon the northe fro Trent forwarde for it was yt tyme yt most party the kynges enemyes. But within fewe yeres after Arthur wan alle the north scotland, and alle that were vnder their obeissance.
Also Walys a parte of it helde ayenst Arthur, but he ouercam hem al as he dyd the remenaunt thurgh the noble provess of hym self and his knyghtes of the round table.

Thenne the kyng remewed in to Walys, and lete crye a grete feste that it shold be holdyn at Pentecost after the incoronacion of hym at the Cyte of Carlyon, vnto the fest come kyng Lott of Lowthean, and of Orkeney, with fyue C knyztes with hym. Also ther come to the feste kyng Uryens of gore with fouer C knyztes with hym. Also ther come to that feste kyng Nayntres of garloth with seuen C knyghtes with hym. Also ther came to the feast the kyngge of Scotland with sixe honderd knyghtes with hym, and he was but a yong man. Also ther came to the feste a kyng that was called the kyng with the honderd knyghtes, but he and his men were passyng wel bisene at al poyntes. Also ther cam the kyng of Cardos with fyue honderd knyghtes. And kyng Arthur was glad of their comynge, for he wende that al the kynges and knyghtes had com for grete lowe, and to haue done hym worship at his feste, wherfor the kyng made grete ioye, and sente the kynges and knyghtes grete presente. But the kynges wold none receyue, but rebuked the messengers shamefully, and said they had no ioye to receyue no yeftes of a berdles boye that was come of lowe blood, and sente hym word, they wold none of his yeftes. But that they were come to gyue hym yeftes with hard swerdys betwixt the neck and the sholkers. And therefore they cam thyder, so they told to the messengers playnly, for it was grete shame to all them to see suche a boye to haue a rule of soo noble a resume as this land was. With this ansuer the messengers departed & told to kyng Arthur this ansuer. Wherfor by the aduys of his barons he took hym to a strong towre with .v. C good men with hym. And all the kynges afore said in a maner leyd a syege tofore hym, but kyng Arthur was well vytailled. And with in xv dayes ther came Merlyn amonage hem in to the Cyte of Carlyon, themne all the kynges were passyng gladde of Merlyn, and asked hym for what cause is that boye Arthur made your kyngge. Syres said Merlyn, I shalle telle you the cause for he is kyngge Utherpen-dragons sone borne in wedlok goten on Igrayne the dukes wyf of Tyntigail, thenne is he a bastard they said al, nay said Merlyn. After the deth of the duke more than thre houres was Arthur begoten. And xiii dayes after kyng Uther wedded Igrayne. And therfor I preue hym he is no bastard. And who saith nay, he shal be kyng and ouercome alle his enemyes. And or he deye, he shalle be long kyngge of all Englyond, and haue vnder his obeyssaunce Walys, yrland and Scotland, and moo reames than I will now reherce. Some of the kyngges had merueyl of Merlyns wordes and demed well that it shold be as he said. And som of hem loug hym to scorne, as kyng Lot, and mo other called hym a wytche. But thenne were they accorded with Merlyn that kyngge Arthur shold come outhe and speke with the kyngges, and to come sauf and to goo sauf, suche suraunce ther was made. So Merlyn went unto kyngge Arthur, and told hym bow he had done, and badde hym sere not but come outhe boldly and speke with hem, and spare hem not, but anserue them as their kyngge and chyуетayn, for ye shal ouercome hem all whether they will or nytle.

THE NNE kyngge Arthur came outhe of his tour, and had vnder his gowne a Jesseraunte of double maylle, and ther wente with hym the Archebishop of Caunterbury, and syr Baudewyn of Bretayne and syr kay, and syre Brustias, these were the men of mooest worship that were with hym. And whan they were mette, there was no mekenes but stout wordes on bothe sydes, but alwyes kyngge Arthur ansered them and said, he wold make them to bowe and be lyued wherfore they departed with wrath, and kyngge Arthur badde kepe hem wel, and they bad the kyngge kepe hym wel. Soo the kyngge returnyd hym to the toure aseyne and armed hym and alle his knyxtes, what will ye do said Merlyn to the kyngges ye were better for to stynte, for ye shalle not here preuaille though ye were x so many, be we wel anyued to be aferd of a dreme reder said kyng Lot, with that Merlyn vanysshed aweye, and came to kynge Arthur, and bad hym set on hem fiersly, & in the mene whyle there were the hundred good men of the best that were with the kynges, that went streighte vnto kyngge Arthur, and that comforts hym gretely.
Syr said Merlyn to Arthur, fyghte not with the swerde that ye had by myrracle, til that ye see ye go vnto the wers, thenne drawe it out and do your best. So forth with alle kyngge Arthur sette vpon hem in their lodgyng. And syre Bawdwyn syre Kay and syr Brastias slewe on the right hand & on the lyfte hand that it was merueyllle, and alweyes Kyngge Arthur on horsback leyd on with a sward and dyd merueillous dedes of armes that many of the kynges had gret joye of his dedes and hardynesse. Thenne Kyngge Lot brake out on the bak syde, and the kyng with the honderd knyghtes and kyng Carados, and sette on Arthur fiersly behynde hym, with that Syre Arthur torned with his knyghtes, and smote behynd and before, and ever sir Arthur was in the fornest presys tyl his hors was slayne vnderneath the hym. And therwith kyngge lot smote doune kyng Arthur. With that his four knyghtes receyued hym and set hym on horsback, thene he drewe his sward Excalibur, but it was so bryght in his enemies eyen, that it gaf light lyke xxx torchys. And therwith he put hem on bak, and slewe moche peple. And thenne the comyns of Carlvon aros with clubbis and stauys and slewe many knyghtes, but alle the kynges helde them to gyders with her knyghtes that were lefte on lyue, and so fled and departed. And Merlyn come vnto Arthur, and counsellied hym to folowe hem no further.

Capitulum x.

So after the feste and iourneye kyngge Arthur drewe hym vnto london, and soo by the counsell of Merlyn the kyng lete calle his barons to coucil, for Merlyn had told the kyngge that the sixe kynges that made warre vpon hym wold in al haste be awroke on hym & on his landys, wherfor the kyng asked counsell at hem al, they coude no counsell gyue but said they were bygge ynough, ye saye wel said Arthur. I thanke you for your good courage, but wil ye al that loueth me speke with Merlyn ye knowe wel that he hath done moche for me, and he knoweth many thynges, & whan he is afore you, I wold that ye prayd hym hertely of his best auye. Alle the barons sayd they wold pray hym and desyre hym. Soo Merlyn was sente for & fair desyred of al the barons to gyue them best councel. I shall say you said Merlyn I warne yow al, your enemie are passyng strong for yow, and they are good men of armes as ben on lyue, & by thys tyme they haue goten to them four kynges mo, and a myghty duke, and onlesse that our kyng haue more chyualry with hym than he may make within y* boundys of his own reame and he fyghte with hem in batail, he shal be overcome & slayn, what were best to doo in this cause said al the barons. I shal telle you said Merlyn myne auyas, there ar two bretheren beyond the see, & they be kynges bothe and merueilous good men of her handes. And that one hyghte Kyng Ban of Benwic And that other hyghte Kyng Bors of gaule that is Fraunce. And on these two Kynges warrith a myghty man of men the Kyng Claudas, and stryueth with hem for a castel, and grete werre is betwixt them. But this Claudas is so myghty of goodes wherof he geteth good Knytzes that he putteth these two kynges moost parte do the werre, whefor this is my councel that our kyng and souerayne lord sende vnto the kynges Ban and Bors by two trusty knyghtes with letters wel deuysed, that and they wil come and see kyng Arthur and his courte, & so helpe hym in his warrys that he wil be sworne vnto them to helpe them in their warrys ageynst kyngs Claudas. Now what saye ye vnto this councel said Merlyn, thyss is wel councelled said the kyng & alle the Barons, right so in alle haste ther were ordeyned to goo two knyghtes on the message vnto the two kynges. Soo were there made letters in the pleasaunt wyse accordyng vnto kyng Arthurs desyre, Ulfyus and Brastias were made the messengers, & so rode forth wel horded and wel arme, and as the wyse was that tyme & so passed the see & rode toward the cyte of Benwyc, and there besydes were vii knyghtes that aspyed them. And at a strayt passage they mette with Ulfyus & Brastias, & wold haue taken hem prysoner, so they prayd hem that they myght passe, for they were messagers vnto kyng Ban & Bors sent from kyngge Arthur, therfor said the viii knyghtes ye shalle dye or be prysoneors, for we ben knyghtes of kyng Claudas. And therwith two of them dressid their sperys, and Ulfyus and Brastias dressid theire speres, and ramne to gyder with grete raundon. And Claudas knyghtes brack their speres, and ther to hylde and bare the two knyghtes out of her sadels to the erthe, and so lefte hem lyeng and rode her wayes. And the other sixe knyghtes rode afore to a passage to mete wyth hem aqoyne, and so Ulfyus & Brastias smote other two doun And so past on her wayes. And at the fourth passage there mette two for two, and bothe were leid vnto the erthe, so ther was none of the viii knyghtes but he was sore hurte or bryseid. And whan they come to Benwick it fownteyned ther were both kynges Ban and Bors. And whan it was told the kynges that there were come messagers, there were sente vnto them ii knyghtes of worship, the one hyghte Lyons lord of the countrey of payrne and Sir phariaunce a worshipful knyght. Anone they asked from whens they came, and they said from kyngge Arthur kyng of Englond, so they took them in theyre armes and made grete ioye ech of other. But anon as the ii kynges wist they were messagers of Arthurs, ther was made no taryenge, but forthwith they spak with the knyghtes, & welcomed hem in the feythfullest wyse, & said, they were most welcome vnto them before alle the kynges luyynge, and ther with they kyst the letters & deluyerd hem. And whan Ban and Bors understanded the letters, themne were they more welcome than they were before. And after the hast of the letters, they gaf hem this answere that they wold fulfille the desyre of kyngge Arthurs wrytynge & Ulfyus & Brastias tary there as longe as they wold, they shold haue suche chere as myghte be made them in the marchys. Themne Ulfyus & Brastias told the kyng of the adueture at their passages of the eyghte knyztes. Ha A said Ban and Bors they were my good frendes. I wold I had wyyst of hem they shold not haue escaped so. So Ulfius & Bras-tias had good chere and grete yeftes as moche as they myghte bere awey, and hadde their ansure by mouthe and by wrytynge that tho two Kynges wold come vnto Arthur in all the hast that they mynte. So the two Knyghtes rode on a fore, and passed the see, and come to their lord and told hym how they had spedde, wherof Kynde Arthur was passyng gladde. At what tyne suppose ye, the ii Kynges wol be here. Syr said they afoye all halowmass. Thenne the kyng lete puruoy for a grete feeste, and lete crye a grete Justes.
And by all halowmass the two kynges were come ouer the see with thre honderd knyzes wel arayed both for the pees and for the werre.
And kyng Arthur mette with hem x myle oute of london, and ther was grete ioye as coude be thouz or made. And on al halowmass at the grete feeste sate in the halle the thre kynges, and syre kay sencial serued in the halle. And Syr lucas the bottelere that was duke Corneus sone, & sir gryflet that was the sone of Cardol, these iii knyzes had the rule of alle the seruyse that serued the kynges.
And anon as they had wasshen & rysen, al knyzes that wold just made hem redy, by than they were redy on horsbak there were vii C knyghtes. And Arthur Ban & Bors with the Archebissop of Caunterbury, and syre Ector kays fader they were in a place couerd with clothe of gold lyke an halle with ladyes and gentilwynmmen for to behold who dyd best and thereon to gyue jugement.

Capitulum xi.

And kyng Arthur and the two Kynges lete deporte the vii C knyghtes in two partyes. And there were iii C knyghtes of the realme of Benwick and of gaule torned on the other syde than they dressid her shieldes, and beganne to couche her spere many good knyghtes. So Gryflet was the first that mette with a knyghte one ladynas and they mett so egerly that al men hadde wonde. And they soo saughte that her shieldes felle to pyeece, and hors and man felle to the erthe. And bothe the freysshe knyghte and the Englysshe knyghte lay so longe that alle men wend they had ben dede. Whan lucas the botteler saw Gryflet soo lye, he horsd hym aseyne anon, and they two dyd merueilous dedes of armes with many bachelers. Also syre kay came oute of an enbusshement with fyue knyghtes with hym, and they sise smote other sise doune.
But syr kay dyd that day merueilous dedes of armes, that ther was none dyd so wel as he that day. Thenne ther come ladynas & Grastian two knyghtes of fraunce, and dyd passyng wel that all men preyed them.

Thenne come there Syre placidas a good knyghte and mette with syr kay and amote hym doune hors and man, wherfore Syre gryffet was wrothe and mette with Syre placidas soo harde that hors and man felle to the erthe. But whan the .v. knyghtes wyst that syr kay had a falle they were wrothe out of wyt. And therwithe ech of them .v. bare doune a knyghte. Whanne kyng Arthur and the two kynges sawe hem begyn waxe wrothe on bothe partyes, they lepte on smale hakeneis, and letse crye that all men shold departe vnto their lodgynge. And so they wente home and vnarmed them and so to euen songe and souper. And after the thre kynges wente in to a gardyn, and gaf the pryce vnto syre kay and to lucas the bottelere, and vnto Syre Gryffet. And thenne they wente vnto counceil, and with hem gwenbaus the brother vnto syr Ban & Bors a wyse Clerk, and thyder wente Ulfyus and Brastias and Merlyn. And after they had ben in counceill, they wente vn to bedde. And on the morne they herde masse and to dyner, and so to their counceille and made many argumentis what were best to doo. At the last they were concluded, that Merlyn shold goo with a token of kyng Ban and that was a rynge vnto his men and kyng e Bors and Gracian & placidas sholde goo aseyne and kepe thire castels and her countries, as for kyng Ban of Benwick and kyng e Bors of Gaules had ordeyned hem, and so passed the see and came to Benwyck. And whan the peple sawe kyng Bans rynge & gracion and placidas they were glad, and asked how the kynges ferd, and made grete ioye of their welfare and cordying, and accordyng vnto the soucrayne lorde desyre, the men of warre made hem redy in al hast posyble, soo that they were xv M on hors and foot, and they had grete plente of vytaylle with hem by Merlyns prouysyon. But gracion and placidas were lefte to furnyshe and garnyshe the castels for drede of kynges Claudas. ryght so Merlyn passed the see vel vytaylled bothe by water and by land. And whan he came to the see, he sente home the foote men aseyne and took no mo with hym, but x M men on horsbak the moost parte men of armes and so shpped and passed the see in to Englond, and londed at Douer, and thorow the wytte of Merlyn he lad the hoost Northward the pryuyest wey that coude be thoughte vnto the forest of Bedegrayne, and there in a valey he lodged hem secretely.

Thenne rode Merlyn vnto Arthur and the two kynges & told hem how he had sped, wherof they had grete merueylle, that man on erthe myghte spede so soone, and goo and come. So Merlyn told them xx M were in the forest of Bedegrayne wel armed at al poyntes, thenne was there no more to saye, but to horsbak wente all the hoost as Arthur had afore purueyed. So with xx M he passed by nyghte and day, but ther was made suche an ordenaunce afore by Merlyn that ther shold no man of werre ryde nor go in no countrrey on this syde trent water, but yf he had a token from kyngle Arthur, where thorow the kynges enemys durste not ryde as they dyd to fore to aspye.

And soo within a lytel space the thre kynges came unto the Castel of Bedegrayne, and fond there a passynege sayr felauiship and wel be sene, wherof they had grete ioye, and vyttaille they wanted none. This was the cause of the northern hoost that they were reered for the despyte and rebuke the syx kynges had at Carlyon. And tho vi kynges by her meanes gate vnto hem fyue other kynges. And thus they beganne to gadre theyr peple.

And how they swere that for wele nor woo they shold not leue other, tyll they had destroyed Arthur, and thenne they made an oth. The fyrst that beganne the othe was the duke of Candebeinet, that he wold brynge with hym v M men of armes the which were redy on horsbak. Thenne swere kyngle Brandegoris of stranggore that he wold brynge v M men of armes on horsbak. Thenne swere kyngle Claryuau of Northumberland he wold brynghe thre thousand men of armes, thenne swere the kyng of the C kyghtes that was a passynege good man and a yonge that he wold brynge four thousand men of armes on horsbak, thenne ther swere kyngle Lott a passynge good knyzt and syre Gawyns fader that he wold brynge v M men of armes on horsbak. Also ther swore kyng Uryence that was syr Uwayns fader of the lond of gore and he wold brynge vi M men of armes on horsbak. Also ther swore kyng Idres of Cornewaille that he wold brynge v M men of armes on horsbak. Also ther swore kyng cardelmans to brynge v M mē on horsbak. Also ther swore kyng Agwysance of Irelond to brynge v M of armes on horsbak. Also ther swore kyng Nentres to brynge v M men of armes on horsbak. Also there swore kyng Carados to brynge v M men of armes on horsbak. Soo her hool hoost was of clene men of armes on horsbak fyfty thousand and a foot x thousand of good menes bodyes, thenne were they soone redy and mounted vpon hors and sente forth their fore rydars, for these xi kynges in her ways leyd a sanye vnto the castel of Bedegrayne, and so they departed and drewe toward Arthur and lefte fewe to abyde at the sanye for the castel of Bedegrayne was holden of kyngge Arthur, and the men that were theryn were Arthurs.

Soo by Merlyns aduys ther were sente fore rydars to skumme the Countreye, & they mette with the fore rydars of the north, and made hem to telle whiche wey the hooste cam, and thenne they told it to Arthur, and by kyng Ban and Bors counseill they lete bremne and destoye alle the contrey afore them there they shold ryde.

The kyngge with the honderd knyghtes mette a wonder dreme two nyghtes a fore the bataille, that ther blewe a grete wynde & blewe downe her castels and her townes, and after that cam a water and bare hit all awey. Alle that herd of the sweuen said, it was a token of grete batayll. Thenne by counseill of Merlyn whan they wist whiche wey the xi kynges wold ryde and lodge that nyghte. At mydnyght they sette vpon them as they were in theyr pauelyons. But the scoute wachte by her boost cryed lordes att armes for here be your enemies at your hand.
THENNE kynge Arthur and kynge Ban and Kynge Bors with her good and trusty knyghtes set on hem so fyersly that he made them ouer throwe her pauenions on her hedys, but the xi kynge by manly prowesse of armes take a fayre champayne, but there was slayne that morowe tyde x M good mennys bodies. And so they had afore hem a strong passage yet were they ffty M of hardy men. Thenne it drew toward day, now shalle ye doo by myne aduys said Merlyn vnto the thre kynges I wold that kynge Ban and kynge Bors with her felauship of x M men were put in a wood heere besyde in an embusaument and kepe them preuy, and that they be led or the lyght of the daye come, and that they stere not tyll ye and your knyghtes haue foughte with hem longe. And whanne hit is daye lyght dresse your bataille euem afore them and the passage that they maye see alle your hooste. For thenne wyl they be the more hardy when they see yow but aboute xx M, and cause hem to be the gladder to suffre yow and youre hoost to come ouer the passage. All the thre kynges and the hoole barons sayde that Merlyn sayd passyngly wel, and it was done anon as Merlyn had deuyed. Soo on the morn whan eyther hoost sawe other, the hoost of the north was well comforted. Thenne to Ulfyus and Brastias were deluyed thre thowsand men of armes, and they sette on hem fyersly in the passage, and sloe on the ryght hand and on the lyft hand that it was wonder to telle.

Whanne that the enleuen kynge sawe that there was so fewe a felauship dyd suche dedes of armes they were ashamed and sette on hem agayne fyersly, and ther was sryr Ulfyus hors slayne under hym, but he dyd merueyllously well on foote. But the Duke Eustace of Cambenet and Kynge Claryaunce of Northumberland, were alweye greauous on Ulfyus, thenne Brastias sawe his felawe ferd so with al, he smote the duke with a spere that hors & man fell doune, that sawe kynge Claryaunce and retorne vnto Brastias, and eyther smote other soo that hors & man wente to the erthe, and so they lay long astonyed, & their hors knees brast to the hard bone. Thenne cam Sry kay the sencyal with syxe felawes with hym, and dyd passyng wel, with that cam the xi kynges, and ther was Gryfllet put to the erthe hors & man and lucas the bottelere hors and man by kyngge Brandegorys and kyng Idres & kyng Agwysaunce, thêne waxed the medle passynge hard on bothe partyes, whan syre kay sawe Gryfllet on foote, he rode on kyng Nentres & smote hym doun and lad his hors vnto syr gryfllet & horsed hym ageyne. Also syr Kay with the same sperre smote doun kyng Lott, & hurt hym passyng sore, that sawe the kyng with the C knyxtes and ran vnto syr kay and smote hym doune and toke his hors, & gaf hym kyng Lott wherof he said gramercy. whan syr Gryfllet sawe syr kay & lucas the bottelere on foote, he took a sharp sperre grete and square, and rode to py nel a good man of armes, and smote hors and man doune. And thenne he tooke his hors, and gaf hym vnto syr kay. Thenne kyngge Lot saw kyng Nentres on foote, he ranne vnto Melot de la roche, & smote hym doune hors and man & gaf kyng Nentres the hors & horsed hym ageyne. Also the kyng of the C knyxtes sawe kyngge Idres on foot thenne he ran vnto Gwymiart de bloy and smote hym doune hors and man & gaf kyngge Idres the hors & horsed hym ageyne, & kyng Lot smote doun Clarysaunce de la forest saucage & gaf the hors vnto duke Eustace. And so whanne they had horsed the kynges ageyne they drewe hem al xi kynges to gyder and said they wold be reuenged of the dommage that they had taken that day. The meane whyle cam in syr Ector with an egyr countenaunce, and found Ulfyus and Brastias on foote in grete peryll of deth that were fowle defoyled vnder hors feet. Thenne Arthur as a lyon ranne vnto kyngge Cradelment of North Walys, and smote hym thorowe the lyfte syde that the hors and the kyngge fylle doune. And thenne he tooke the hors by the rayne, and ladde hym vnto Ulfyus & said hauw this hors myn old frend, for grete nedeh hast thow of hors. gramercy said Ulfyus. thenne syre Arthur dyd so merueilously in armes that all men had wondyr. Whan the kyngge with the C knyghtes sawe kyngge Cradelment on foote, he ranne vnto syre Ector that was wel horsed, syr kayes fader, and smote hors and man doune, and gaf the hors vnto the kyngge, and horsed hym ageyne, and when kyngge Arthur sawe the kyng ryde on syr Ectors hors he was wroth.
and with his sword he smote the kyngge on the helme, that a quarter of the helme and shelle fyll doune, and so the sword carf doune vnto the hors neck, and so the kyng & the hors fyll doune to the ground. Thenne syr kay cam vnto syr Morganore sencial with the kyng of the C knyghtes & smote hym doun hors and man, and lad the hors vnto his fader syre Ector, thenne syr Ector ranne vnto a knyght hyghte lardans, & smote hors & man doume, & lad the hors vnto syr Brastias that grete rede had of an hors and was greteley de-foyled. Whan Brastias beheld lucas the botteler that lay lyke a dede man vnder the horse feet, and euer syr Gryflet dyd meruellaneous for to rescowe hym, and there were alweyes xiii knyghtes on syr lucas, & thenne Brastias smote one of hem on the helme, that it wente to the teeth, & he rode to another and smote hym that the arme flewe in to the feld. Thêne he wente to the third and smote hym on the sholdar that sholdar and arme flewe in the feld. And whan Gryflet sawe rescowes, he smote a knyght on the tempils that hele & helme wente to the erthe, and gryflet took the hors of that knyght & lad hym vnto syr lucas, & bad hym mounte vpon the hors & reuenge his hurtes. For Brastias had slayne a knyghte to fore & harsed gryflet.

Thenne lucas sawe kyng Agwysaunce that late hadde slayne Morys de la roche, and lucas ran to hym with a short sperre that was grete, that he gaf hym suche a falle that the hors felle doun to the erthe. Also lucas found there on fote bloyas de la flaundraes and syr Gwynas ii hardy knyghtes & in that woodenes that lucas was in, he allewe ii bachelers & hersed hem ageyn, thêne waxid the bataile passyng hard on both partyes, but arthur was glad y'i his knyhte were hersed ayene & thêne they foughte to gyders that the noyse and sowne rang by the water & the wood. Wherfor kyng Ban and kyng bors made them redy and dressyd theyr sheldes and harneys, and they were so couragyous that many Knyghtes shoake & beuered for egrenes. All this whyle lucas and Gwynas & bryantte & Bellyas of Flaundraes helde strong medle ayenst vi kynges, that was kyng Lott, kyng Nentres, kyng Brandegorys, Kyng Idres, kyng Uryens & kyng Agwyssauce. Soo with the helpe of syre kay & of syr grifflet, they helde these vi kynges hard that vnethe they had ony power to defend them. But whan syr Arthur sawe the batail wold not be endyd by no maner, he fered wood as a lyon, & stered his hors here & there on the right hand & on the lyft hand that he stynte not tyl he had slayne xx knyztes. Also he wounded kyng Lot sore on the sholder and made hym to leue that ground, for syre kay & griffet dyd with kyng Arthur there grete dedes of armes. Thenne Ulfyus and Brastias, & sir Ector encountred ageyst the duke Eustace & kyng Cradelment & kyng Cradelmat & kyng Claryauce of Northumberland & kyng Carados & ageyst the kyng with the C knyztes. So these knyztes encountred with these kynges that they made them to auoyde the grounde. theis Kyng Lott made grete dool for his dommages & his felawes, & said vnsto the x kynges but yf ye wil do as I deuyse we shalle be slayn & destroyed, lete me haue the kyng with the C Knuztes & kyng Agwyssauce & kyng Idres and the duke of Canbenec, & we v Kynges wol haue xv M men of armes with vs & we wille go on parte, wyle ye vi Kynges holde the medle with xii M. and we see that ye haue foursten with hem long thene will we come on fyerly, & elys shall we neuer matche hem said kyng Lot but by this meane. So they departed as they here deuyse, & vi kynges made her party strong ageyst Arthur and made grete warre longe. In the meane whyle brake the enbusheament of Kyng Ban and kyng bors, and Lyonses and Pharysauce had the aduant garde, and they two knyghtes mette with kyng Idres and his felauhip, and there began a grete medele of brekyng of speres and smytyng of swardys with sleyng of men and horses. And kyng Idres was nere at discomforture.

That sawe Agwyssauce the kyng and put lyonses and pharysance in pouynte of dethe, for the duke of Canbenec came on with all with a grete felauhip, soo these two knyghtes were in grete daunger of their lyues that they were fayn to retorne but alwayes they rescowed hem self and their felauhip merueilously. Whan kyng Bors sawe tho knyghtes put on bak it greued hym sore, thene he cam on so fast that his felauhip seemed as blak as Inde. Whan kyng Lot had aspyed kynge bors, he knewe hym wel, thenne he said O Jhesu defende vs frō deth & horrible maymes, for I see wel we ben in grete perylle of dethe, for I see yonder a kynge one of the most worshipfullest men & one of the best knyxtes of the world ben enclyned vnto his felauhip, what is he said the kynge with the C knyxtes, it is said kyng Lot kyng bors of gaule. I merueile how they come in to this countreye without wetynge of vs all. It was by Merlyns auyse said the knyghte. As for hym sayd kyng Carados, I wylle encountre with kyngs bors, and ye wil rescowe me whan myster is, go on sayd they al, we wil do all that we may, thenne kyng Carados & his hoost rode on a softe pace tyl that they come as nyghe kyngs bors as a bowe draughte, thenne eyther battaille lete their hors renne as fast as they myghte. And Bleoberys that was godson vnto kyngs Bors he bare his chyef standard, that was a passyng good knyghte. Now shal we see sayd kyng Bors hou these northerne bretons can bere the armes, & kyng bors encountred with a knyght, and smote hym thorow out with a sperre that he fel dede vnto the erthe, and after drewe his swerd & dyd merueilous dedes of armes that all partyes had grete wōder therof, & his knyxtes failled not but dyd their part, & kyng Carados was smyten to the erthe. With that came the kyng with the C knyxtes & rescued kyng Carados myzelye by force of armes, for he was a passyng good knyght of a kyngge, & but a yong man.

By than come in to the feld kyngge Ban as fyers as a lyon with bandys of grene, & therupon gold. Ha a said kyng Lot we must be discomfyte, for yonder I see the moste valyaunt knyte of the world, and the man of the most renoume, for suche ii bretheren as is kyng Ban & kyng bors ar not lyuynge, wherfore we must nedes voyde deye. And but yf we auoyde manly and wysely, ther is but dethe. whanne kyngge Ban came in to the bataill, he cam in so fieraly, that the strokes redounded ageyne fro the woode and the water, wherfor kyngge Lott wepte for pyte and doole that he sawe so many good knyghtes take theyr ende. But thorowe the grete force of kyng Ban they made both the Northen bataylles that were departed, hurtled to gyders for grete drede, and the thre kynges & their knyghtes slewe on euer that it was pyte on to behold that multitude of the people that fledde. But kyng Lott and Kyng of the hon-derd knyghtes & kyngge Morganore gadred the peple to gyders pass-yng knyghtly, and dyd grete prowesse of armes, and helde the bataill all that daye lyke hard. Whanne the kyng of the honderd knyghtes behold the grete damage that kyngge Ban dyd, he threst vnto hym wyth his hors and smote hym on hythe vpon the helme a grete stroke and stonyed hym sore. Thennne kyngge Ban was wroth with hym, and folowed on hym fyersly, the other saw that, and cast vp his shield & spored his hors forward. But the stroke of kyngge Ban felle doune and carfe a cantel of the shield, and the swerd solde doune by the hanbeerk behynde his back, & cut thorow the trappere of stele, and the hors euen in two pyeces that the swerd felte the erthe. Thennne the kyngge of the C knyghtes voyded the hors lyghtly and with his swerd he broched the hors of kyng Ban thorow and thorow, with that kyngge Ban voyded lyghtly from the deede hors, and thenne kyngge Ban smote at the other so egrely, and smote hym on the helme that he felle to the erth. Also in that yre he feld kyng Morganore and there was grete slaughter of good knyghtes and moche peple, by than come in to the prees kyngge Arthur, and fond Kyngge Ban stondynge among dede men and dede hors fyghtynge on foote as a wood lyon, that ther came none nyghe hym as fer as he myght reche with his swerd, but he caughthe a grevous buffet wherof Kyngge Arthur had grete pyte. And Arthur was so blody that by his sheld ther myght no man knowe hym, for all was blood and braynes on his swerd. And as Arthur loked by hym he sawe a knyght that was passyngly wel horsed, and therwith syre Arthur ranne to hym, and smote hym on the helme that his swerd wente vnto his teeth, and the knyght sanke doune to the erthe dede, & anon Arthur tooke the hors by the rayne and ladde hym vnto kyngge Ban & said fair broder, haue this hors, for ye haue grete myster therof & me repenteth sore of your grete dammage. Hit shall be soone reuengid said Kyngge Ban, for I truste in god myne eure is not suche but some of them may sore repente thys. I wol wel said Arthur, for I see your dedes full actual. Neuerthles I myghte not come at yow at that tyme. But whanne Kynge Ban was mounted on horabak, thenne there beganne newe bataill the whyche was sore and hard, and passyng grete slaughter. And so thurgh grete force Kynge Arthur, Kynge Ban and Kynge Bors made her knyghtes a litel to withdrawe them. But alwey the xi Kynes with her chyualrye neuer torned bak, and so withdrew hem to a lytly woode, and so ouer a lytly ryuer, & there they rested hem, for on the nyghte they myghte haue no rest on the feld. And thei the xi kynes and knyghtes put hem on a hepe all to gyders as men adrad and out of all conforte, but ther was no man myghte passe them, they helde hem so hard to gyders bothe behynde and before that kynge Arthur had meruelle of their dedes of armes and was passynge wrothe. A syr Arthur said kynge Ban and kynge Bors blame hem noughte, For they doo as good men ouzt to doo. For by my feith said kynge Ban, they are the best fyghtyng men and knyghtes of moost prowesse that euere I sawe or herd speke of. And tho xi kynes are men of grete worship. And yf they were longyng vnto yow, there were no kynge vnder the heuen hadde suche xi knyghtes and of suche worship. I may not loue hem said Arthur, they wold destroye me, that wote we wel said kynge Ban and Kynge Bors, for they are your mortal enemyes, and that hath ben preued afore hand. And this day they haue done theire parte, and that is grete pyt of theire wilfulnes. Thenne alle the xi kynes drewe hem to gyder. And thenne said kynge Lott, lordes ye must other wayes than ye do, or els the grete losse is behynde, ye may see what peple we haue lost, and what good men we lese, by cause we waytte alwayes on these foote men, and euere in sauyng of one of the foote men we lese x horsmen for hym, therfore this is myne aduyes, let vs put our foote men from vs, for it is nere nyghte. For the noble Arthur wille not tary on the foote men, for they maye saue hem self, the woode is nere hand. And when we horsmen be to gyders, loke euerchy of yow kynes lete make suche ordinaunce that none breke vpon payne of deathe. And who that seeth ons man dresse hym to flee, lightly that he be slayne, for it is better that we selle a coward than thorow a coward alle we to be slayne. How saye ye said kyngs Lott, ansuer me all ye kynges, it is wel said quod kyng Nentres, so said the kynges of the honderd knyghtes, the same saide the kyng Carados and kyng Uryence, so dyd kyng Idres and kyng brandegorys, and so dyd kyng Cradulmas and the duke of Cadebenet, the same said kyng Claryunce & kyng Agwysance and swere they wold neuer faile other neyther for lyf nor for dethe. And who so that fledde but did as they dyd shold be slayne. Thenne they amended their harneys and ryghted thiere shieldes and tooke newe sperys and sette hem on thiere thyes and stode stille as hit had ben a plompe of wood.

Whanne Syre Arthur and kyng ban and bors byhelde them and all her knyghtes they preyed hem moche for their noble chere of chyvalrye for the hardyest fyghters that euer they herd or sawe. With that there dressyd hem a xl noble knyghtes and saide vnto the thre kynges, they wold breke their bataille, these were her names. Lyonses, pharyaunce, Ulfyus, brastias, Ector, kaynes, lucas the bottelere, Gryflett la fyse de dieu, mariet de la roche, Gwynas de bloy, briat de la foresst sauege, bellaus, Moryans of the castel maydys, flamedreus of the castel of ladyes, Annecians that was kyngs bors godsone a noble knyght, ladynas de la rouse, Emerause, Cauas, Gracyens le casteleyyn, one bloyse de la case, and syre Colgreuence de gorre, all these knyntes rode on a fore with sperys on their thyes, and spored their horses myghtely as the horses myzte remme. And the xi kynges with parte of her knyntes russched with their horses as fast as they myzte with their speres, & ther they dyd on both partyes merueilous dedes of armes, soo came in to the thycke of the prees Arthur ban & bors & alewe doune right on both handes that her horses went in blood vp to the fytykys. But euer the xi Kynges and their hooste was euer in the vysage of Arthur, wherfore Ban and Bors had grete meruelle consydering the grete slauster that there was, but at the last they were dryuen abak ouer a lytil ryuer, with that came Merlyn on a grete black hors, and said vnto arthur thow hast neuer done, hast thou not done ynough, of thre score thousand this day hast thou lefte on lyue but xv M, and it is tyme to saye ho for god is wrothe with the that thow wolt neuer haue done, for yonder xi kynges at this tyne wyll not be ouerthrown, but and thow tary on them ony lenger, thy fortune wille torne and they shall encreace. And therfor withdrawe yow vnto your lodgyng and reste you as soone as ye may and rewarde your good knyztes with gold and with sylluer, for they haue wel deserved hit, there may no rychesse be to dere for them, for of so fewe men as ye haue ther were neuer men dyd more of prowesse than they haue done to day, for ye haue matched this day with the beste fyghters of the world, that is trouthe the said kyng Ban and bors. Also said Merlyn, withdrawe yow where ye lyst, for this thre yere I dar vndertake they shalle not dere yow. And by than ye shalle here newe tyldygnes. And thenne Merlyn said vnto arthur, these xi kynges haue more on hand than they are ware of, for the Sarasyns ar londed in their countreyes mo than xl M that brene and slee, and haue leid syyge att the castel Wandesborow and make grete destruction, therfore drede yow not this thre yere.

Also byr al the goodes that ben goten at this bataill lete it be serched. And whanne ye haue it in your handys lete it be gyuen frely vnto these two kynges Ban and Bors that they may rewarde theyr knyghtes with all. And that shalle cause straungers to be of better wyll to do yow seruyse at nede. Also ye be able to reward youre owne knyghtes of your owne goodes when someuer it lyketh you. It is wel said qd Arthur, and as thow hast deuyse d so shal it be done. Whanne it was deluyerd to Ban & Bors they gaf the goodes as frely to their knyztes as frely as it was yeuen to them.
Thenne Merlyn took his leue of Arthur and of the ii kynges for to go and see his mayster Bleyse that dwelde in Northumberland, and so he departed and cam to his maister that was passyng glad of his comynge, & there he tolde, how Arthur and the two kynges had sped at the grete batayll, and how it was ended, and told the names of every kyng and knyght of worship that was there. And soa Bleyse wrote the bataill word by word as Merlyn told hym how it began, & by whomc, & in lyke wyse how it was endyd, and who had the werre. All the batails that were done in arthur's dayes, merlyn dyd his maister Bleyse do wryte. Also he did do wryte all the batails that every worthy knyght dyd of arthur's Courte. After this Merlyn departed from his mayster and came to kynge Arthur that was in the castel of Bedegrayne, that was one of the castels that stondyn in the forest of Sherwood. And Merlyn was so disguysed that kynge Arthur knewe hym not, for he was all be furred in black shepe skynnes and a grete payre of bootes, and a bowe and arowes in a russet gowne, and broughte wild gyse in his hād, and it was on the morne after candelmas day, but kynge Arthur knewe hym not. Syre said Merlyn vnto the kynge, wil ye gyue me a yefte, wherfor said kynge Arthur shold I gyue the a yefte chorie. Sir said Merlyn ye were better to gyue me a yefte that is not in your hand than to lese grete rychesse, for here in the same place there the grete batailli was is grete tresour hyd in the ethe, who told the so chorle said Arthur. Merlyn told me so said he, thenne Ulfysu and Brastias knew hym wel ynown and smyled. Syre said these two knyghtes it is Merlyn that so speketh vnto yow, thenne kynge arthur was gretelly absashed and had merueyll of Merlyn, & so had kynge Ban and kynge Bors, and soo they had grete dysport at hym. Soo in the meane whyle there cam a damoyssel that was an erlys doughter, his name was Sanam, and her name was Lyonors a passynge faer damoyssel, and so she cam thyder for to do homage as other lorde dyd after the grete batail. And kynge Arthur sette his loue gretelly vpon her and so dyd she vpon hym, and the kynge had adoo with her, and gat on her a child, his name was Borre that was after a good knyghte and of the table round, thenne ther cam word that the kynge Ryence of Northen Walys maade grete werre on kynge Lodegreance of canyl-yard, for the whiche thyng arthur was wroth for he loued hym wel and hated kynge Ryence, for he was alwey ageynst hym. So by ordenaunce of the thre kynges that were sente home vnto Benwyck, alle they wold departhe for drede of kynge Claudas and pharynance and Antemes and Grasians and lyoneses, payarne with the leders of tho that shold kepe the kynge's landys.
Capitulum xviii.

And thenne kynge Arthur and kynge Ban & kynge Bors departed with her felauship a xx M and came within vi dayes in to the countrye of Camylarade, and there rescowed kynge Lodegresunee and slawe ther moche people of kynge Ryence vnto the nombre of x M men and put hym to flyghte. And thenne had these thre kynge grete chere of kynge Lodegresunee that thanked them of their grete goodnesse that they wold reuenge hym of his enemies, and there hadde Arthur the fyrst syght of gweneuer the kynge's daughter of Camylyard, and euere after he loued her. After they were weddyd as it telleth in the booke. Soo breuely to make an ende, they took theyr leue to goo in to theyre owne Countreyes for kynge Claudas dyd grete destruction on their landes. Thenne said Arthur I wille goo with yow. Nay said the kynges ye shalle not at this tyme, for ye haue moche to doo yet in these landes, therfore we wilde departe, and with the grete goodes that we haue gotten in these landes by youre yeftes we shalle wage good knyghtes & withstande the kynge Claudas malice, for by the grace of god and we haue sede we wilde sende to yow for youre socour. And ye ye haue sede sende for vs, and we wilde not tary by the feythe of our bodyes. Hit shalle not saide Merlyn sede that these two kynge shalle aseyne in the waye of werre. But I knowe wel kynge Arthur maye not be longe from yow, for within a yere or two ye shalle haue grete sede. And threme shalle he reuenge yow on youre enemies as ye haue done on his. For these xi kynge shal deye all in a day by the grete myghte and prowess of armes of ii valyaunt knyghtes as it telleth after, her names ben Balyne le Sauge and Balan his broder that ben merueilous good knyghtes as ben ony lyuung.

Now torne we to the xi kynge that retorned vnto a cyte that hyghte Sorhaute, the whiche cyte was within kynge Uryens, and ther they refreshed hem as wel as they myght, and made leches serche theyr woundys and sorrowed gretely for the dethe of her peple, with that ther came a messager and told how ther was comen in to their landes people that were laules as wel as sarasyns a xi M and haue brent & alayn al the peple that they may come by withoute mercy, and haue leyd syege on the castel of Wadisborow. Allas sayd the xi kynges here is sorrow vpon sorou. And yf we had not warryd agaynst Arthur as we haue done, he wold soone reuenge vs, as for kyng Lodgryane he loueth Arthur better than vs. And as for kyng Ryence, he hath ynough to doo with Lodegreans, for he hath leyd syege vnto hym. Soo they consentyd to gyder to kepe alle the marches of Cornewayle, of walys and of the northe, soo fyrst they putte kynges Idres in the Cyte of Nauntys in Brytayne with iii thousand men of armes, to watche bothe the water and the land. Also they put in the cyte of Wyndesan kynges Nauntres of garlott with four thousand knyghtes to watche both on water and on lond. Also they had of other men of werre moo than eyght thousand for to fortyfe alle the fortresses in the marches of Cornewayle. Also they put moo knyghtes in alle the marches of walys and scotland with many good men of armes, and soo they kepe hem to gyders the space of thre yere. And euer alyed hem with myghty kynges and dukes and lorde. And to them felle kynges Ryence of North walys, the whiche was a myghty man of men & Nero that was a mighty man of men. And all this whyle they furnyshed hem and garnyshed hem of good men of armes and vytaille and of alle maner of abylment that pretendidth to the werre to auenge hem for the bataille of Bedegrayne, as it telleth in the book of auentures folowyng.

Capitulum xix.

Thene after the departynge of kyng Ban and of kyng Boris kynges Arthur rode vnto Carlyon. And thyder cam to hym kyng Lots wyf of Orkeney in maner of a message, but she was sente thyder to aspye the Courte of kynges Arthur, and she cam rychely bisen with her four sones, gawayn, Gaherys, Agrausaynes, and Gareth with many other knyghtes and ladyes, for she was a passynge fayr ladie, wherfore the kynges cast grete loue vnto her, and desyreth to lye by her, so they were agreed, and he begate vpon her Mordred, and she was his syster on the moder syde Igrayne. So ther she rested her a moneth and at the last departed. Thene the kyng dremed a mer-ueurilous dreme wherof he was sore adrad. But at this tyme kyng Arthur knewe not that kyng Lots wyf was his syster. Thus was the dreme of Arthur, hym thought thyer was come in to this land Gryffons and Serpentes. And hym thoughte they brente and slough alle the peple in the lad. And thene hym thoughte, he fawghte with hem, and they dyd hym passyng grete harme, and wounded hym ful sore, but at the last he slewe hem. Whanne the kyng awaked, he was passyng heuy of his dreme, and so to put it oute of thoughtes, he made hym redy with many knyghtes to ryde on hunt-yng. As soone as he was in the forest, the kyng sawe a grete hert afore hym, this herte wille I chace said kyng Arthur. And so he spored the hors, and rode after longe. And so by fynge force ofte he was lyke to haue amyten the herte, where as the kyng had chaced the herte soo long that his hors had loste hys brethe and fylle doune dede. Thene a yoman fette the kyng another hors. So the kyng sawe the herte enbushshed and his hors dede, he sette hym doune by a fontayne and there he fell in grete thoughtes. And as he satte so hym thoughte he herd a noyse of houndes to the somme of xxx.
And with that the kyng sawe coomyng toward hym the straungest best that ever he sawe or herd of, so the best wente to the welle and drank, and the noyse was in the bestes bely lyke vnto the questyng of xxx coupyl houndes, but alle the whyle the best dranke there was no noyse in the bestes bely, and therwith the best departed with a grete noyse, wherof the kyng had grete merueyll. And so he was in a grete thoughte, and therwith he fell on slepe. Ryght so ther came a knyght a foote vnto Arthur, and sayd knyght full of thought and slepy, telle me yf thou sawest a straunge best passe this waye. Suche one sawe I said kyng Arthur, that is past two myle, what wold ye with the best said arthur. Syre I haue folowed that best long tyme, and kyld myne hors, so wold god I had another to folowe my quest, ryzte so came one with the kynges hors, and when the knyght sawe the hors, he pryed the kyng to yeue hym the hors, for I haue folowed this quest this xii moneth, and other I shal encheue hym or bled of the best blood of my body. Pellinore that tyme kynges folowed the questynge best, and after his deth sir Palamydes folowed hit.

Capitulum xx.

Syr knyghte said the kynge leue that quest, and suffre me to haue hit, and I wyll folowe it another xii moneth. A foole said the knyghte vnto Arthur, it is in veyne thy desyre, for it shalle neuer ben encheued but by me, or my next kyn, there with he sterte vnto the kynge's hors and mounted in to the sadel, and said gramecy this hors is myn owne, wel said the kynge thou mayst take myn hors by force but and I myzte preue the whether thow were better on hors-bak or I, wel said the knyght seke me here whan thow wolt and here nygh this wel thow shalt fynde me, and soo passyd on his waye, thenne the kyng sat in a study and bad his men fetche his hors as faste as euer they myghte. Ryght soo came by hym Merlyn lyke a child of xiii yere of age and salewed the kyng, and asked hym why he was so pensyf. I may wel be pensyf sayd the kynge, for I haue sene the merueyllest syzt that euer I sawe, that knowe I wel said Merlyn as wel as thy self and of all thy thoughtes, but thow art but a foole to take thought, for it wylle not amend the. Also I knowe what thow arte, and who was thy fader, and of whome thow were begoten, kynge Utherpendragon was thy fader, and begat the on Igrayne, that is fals said kyng Arthur, how sholdest thou knowe it, for thow arte not so old of yeres to knowe my fader, yes sayd Merlyn I knowe it better than ye or ony man lyuyng. I wille not bitleue the said Arthur and was wroth with the child. Soo departed Merlyn and came agrayne in the lykenes of an old man of iii score-yere of age, whereof the kynge was ryght glad, for he semed to be ryghte wyse.

Thenne saide the old man why are ye so sad. I maye wel be heuy said Arthur for many thynges. Also here was a chyld and told me many thynges that me semeth he shold not knowe, for he was not of age to knowe my fader, yes said the old man, the child told yow trouthe, and more wold he haue tolde yow and ye wolde haue suffred hym. But ye haue done a thynge late that god is dis-plesydyd with yow, for ye haue layne by your syster, and on her ye haue goten a chylde that shalle destroye yow and all the knygthe of your realme. What are ye said Arthur that telle me these tydynges.
I am Merlyn, and I was he in the chylde lykenes. A said kyng Arthur ye are a merueillous man, but I merueyle moche, of thy wordes that I mote dye in bataille. Merueyle not said Merlyn, for it is gods wyll youre body to be punysched for your fowle dedes, but I may wel be sory said Merlyn, for I shalle dye a shameful deth to be put in the erthe quyck, and ye shall dye a worshipful deth. And as they talked this, cam one with the kynges hors, and so the kyng mounted on his hors and Merlyn on another and so rode vnto Carlyon, & anone the kynges asked Ector and Ulfyus how he was bi-goten, and they told hym Utherpendragon was his fader & quene Igrayne his moder, thenne he sayd to Merlyn I wyll that my moder be sente for that I may speke with her. And yf she saye so her self, thene wyll I byleue hit. In all hast the quene was sente for, and she cam & broughte with her Morgan le fay her daughter that was as fayre a lady as ony myghte be, & the kynges welcomed Igrayne in the best maner.

Capitulum xxi.

Ryght soo cam Ulfyus & saiide openly that the kynges and all myfr he were that were fested that day, ye are the falseste lady of the world and the most traitresse vnto the kynges person. Beware saiide Arthur what thow saiist, thow spekest a grete word. I am wel ware said Ulfyus what I speke, & here is my gloue to preue hit vpon ony man that will seye the contrary, that this quene Igrayne is causar of your grete domage, & of your grete werre. For and she wold haue vttred it in the lyf of kyng Utherpledragon of the byrthe of yow, and how ye were begotten ye had neuer had the mortall werryys that ye haue had for the moost party of your barons of your realme knewe neuer whos some ye were, nor of whome ye were begotten, & she that bare yow of her body shold haue made it knowan openly in excursyng of her worship & yours, & in lyke wyse to alle the reame, wherfor I preue her fals to god and to yow and to al your realme and who wyll saye the contrary I wyll preue it on his body.

Thenne spak Igrayne and sayd I am a woman and I may not fyghte, but rather than I shold be dishounoured, ther wold some good man take my quarel. More she sayd, Merlyn knoweth wel and ye syr Ulfyus how kynge Uther cam to me in the Castel of Tyntaagall in the lykenes of my lord that was dede thre houres to fore, and therby gat a child that nyght upon me. And after the xiii day kynge Uther wedde me, and by his commaundement when the child was borne it was deluyerd vnto Merlyn and nounyshed by hym, and so I sawe the child neuer after, nor wote not what is his name, for I knowe hym neuer yet. And there Ulfyus saide to the quene Merlyn is more to blame than ye, wel I wote said the quene I bare a child by my lord kyng Uther, but I wote not where he is become. themne Merlyn toke the kynge by the hand sayeng, this is your moder, and therwith syr Ector bare wytnes how he nounyshed hym by Uthers commaundement. And ther with kynge Arthur toke his moder quene Igrayne in\ his armes and kyste her, and eyther wepte vpon other.
And thenne the kynge lete make a feest that lasted eyght dayes.
Thenne on a day ther come in the courte a squyer on hors bak led-ynge a knyght before hym wounded to the deth, and told hym how ther was a knyght in the forest had rered vp a pautelone by a well and hath slayne my mayster a good knyght, his name was mylis, wherfor I bysche yow that my mayster maye be buryed, and that somme knyst maye renenge my maysters deth. thenne the noysse was grete of that knyghtes deth in the Court, and euerie man said his adyus, thenne came Gryflett that was but a squyer, and he was but yonge of the age of the kyng Arthur, soo he besoughte the kyng for alle his seruyse that he had done hym to gyue hym the orde of knyght-hood.
Capitulum xxii.

Thou art full yong and tendyr of age sayd Arthur for to take so hyghe an ordre on the. Sir sayd Gryflet I bysheche yow make me knyght. Syr sayd Merlyn it were grete pyte to lese Gryflet, for he wille be a passyng good man, whanne he is of age, abydynghe with you the terme of his lyf. And yf he aventure his body with yonder knyght at the fontayne it is in grete peryll yf ever he come ageyne, for he is one of the best knyghtes of the world, and the streygyst man of armes, wel sayd Arthur, so at the desyre of gryflet the kynge made hym knyght. Now sayd Arthur vnto syre Gryflet, Sythen I haue made yow knyghte thou must yeue me a gyfte, what ye will sayd Gryflet, thou shalt promyse me by the feythe of thy body whan thou hast Justed with the knyght at the fontayne, whether it faile ye be on foote or on hors bak, that ryght so ye shal come ageyne vnto me withoute makyng me ony more debate. I wyll promyse yow sayd Gryflet as yow desyre. Thanne toke Gryflet his hors in grete haste, & dressyd his sheld and toke a spere in his hand and so he rode a grete wallop tally he cam to the fontayne, and ther by he sawe a ryche pauelion, and ther by vnder a clothe stode a sayr hors wel sadeled and brydeled, and on a tree a sheld of dyuerse colours and a grete spere. Thanne Gryflet smote on the sheld with the bott of his spere that the shylde felle dounne to the ground, with that the knyght cam oute of the pauelione, & sayd fair knyght why smote ye doun my sheld, for I wil Juste with yow sayd gryflet, it is better ye doo not sayd the knyghte, for ye are but yong and late made knyght, and your myghte is nothing to myn, as for that saide Gryflet I wyll Juste with yow, that is me loth sayd the knyght, but sythen I muste nedes I wilde dresse me thereto, of whens be ye saide the knyzte, syre I am of Arthurs courte. So the two knyghtes ranne to gyder that ryflets spere al to sheuered, and ther with all he smote Gryflet thorowe the sheld & the lyfte syde, and brake the spere that the troncheon stack in his body, that hors and knyghte fylle dounne.
Capitulum xxiii.

Than the kyght sawe hym lye soo on the ground, he alyght and was passynghe heuy, for he wende he had slayne hym, and themne he vnlaced his helme and gate hym wynde, and so with the troncheon he set hym on his hors and gate hym wynde, and so bytke hym to god, and seid he had a myghty hert and yf he myght lyue he wold preue a passynghe good knyzt, & so sry Gryflet rode to the court where grete doole was made for hym. But thorowe good leches he was heled, and saued. Ryght so cam in to the Courte xii knyztys & were aged men, and they cam from themperour of Rome, & they asked of Arthur truage for this realme, other els themperour wold destroye hym & his land: Wel said kyng Arthur ye are messagers, therfor ye may say what ye wil other els ye shold dye thersore. But this is myn answyer I owte themperour noo truage nor none will I hold hym, but on a fayr felde I shal yeue hym my truage that shal be with a sharp spere, or els with a sharp swerd, & that shall not be long by my faders soule Utherpendragon, & therwith the messagers departed passyngly wroth, & kyng arthur as wroth, for in euyl tyme cam they thenne, for the kyng was passyngly wroth for the hurte of sir Gryflet, & soo he commaundde a pryuy man of his chambre, that or hit be day his best hors and armour with all that longeth vnto his persone be withoute the cyte or to morowe daye. Ryght so or to morow daye he met with his man and his hors and so mounted vp and dressid his sheld, & toke his spere and bad his chamberlayne tary there till he came aseyne.

And so Arthur roode a softe paas tyll it was day, & themne was he ware of thre chorles chacynge Merlyn, and wold haue slayne hym, themne the kyng rode vnto them, and bad them flee chorles, themne were they aferd when they sawe a knyght and fled. O Merlyn said Arthur, here haddest thou be slayne for all thy craftes had I not byn, Nay said Merlyn not soo, for I coude saue my self and I wold, and thou arte more nere thy deth than I am for thou gost to the deth ward & god be not thy frend. So as they wente thus talkynge, they came to the fontayne, and the ryche pavelione there by hit, themne kyng Arthur was ware where sat a knyght armed in a chayer. Syr knyght said Arthur, for what cause abydest thou here that ther maye no knyght ryde this wey but yf he Juste wyth the said the kyng, I rede the leue that custome said Arthur. This custome saiide the knyght haue I veed and wille use magre who saith nay, & who is greued with my custome, lete hym amende hit that wol. I wil amende it said Arthur. I shal defende the sayd the knyzt, anon he toke his hore & dressid his shylde & toke a sper & they met so hard either in others shieldes that al to sheuered their sperys, ther with anone Arthur pulled oute his swerd, nay not so said the knyght, it is fayrer sayd the knyzt that we tewe ne renne more to gyders with sharp sperys. I wille wel said Arthur and I had ony mo sperys. I haue now said the knyzt, so ther cam a squyer and brouxt ii good sperys, and Arthur chose one & he another, so they spored their horses & cam to gyders with al the myghtes, that eyther brak her sperys to her hanedes, thenne Arthur sette hand on his swerd, nay saiid the knyght, ye shal do better, ye are a passyng good Juster as euer I mette with al, & ones for the loue of the hygh ordre of knyt-hode lete vs Juste ones ageyn. I assente me said Arthur. anone there were brought two grete sperys, and euer knyght gat a sper, and therwith they ranne to gyders that Arthurs sperre al to sheuered.
But the other knyghte hyt hym so hard in myddes of the sheld, that horse & man felle to the erthe, and ther with Arthur was egre & pulled oute his swerd, and said I will assay the syr knyghte on fooe, for I haue lost the honour on horsbak. I will be on horsbak said the knyght, thane was Arthur wrothe and dressid his shed toward hym with his swerd drawen, whan the knyght sawe that, he alyghte, for hym thought no worship to haue a knyght at suche auxille he to be on horsbak and he on foot, and so he alyght & dressid his sheld vnto Arthur & ther bega a strong bataille with many grete strokes, & soo hewe with her sweredes that the cantels flewe in the feldes, and moche blood they bledde both, that al the place there as they faught was ouer bledde with blood, and thus they fought long and rested hem, and thenne they wente to the batayl ageyne, and so hurtled to gyders lyke two rammes that eyther felle to the erthe. So at the last they smote to gyders that both her swerdys met euon to gyders. But the sword of the knyght smote kyng arthurs sword in two pyeaces, wherfor he was heyu. themne said the knyghte vnto Arthur, thow arte in my daunguer whethere me lyst to saue the or slee the, and but thou yelde the as ouercome and recreant, thow shalt deye, as for deth said kyng arthur welcome be it whan it cometh. But to yelde me vnto the as recreant I had leuer deye than to be soo shamde. And ther with al the kyng lepte vnto Pellinore & tooke hym by the myddel and threwe hym doune and raced of his helme. When the knyght felt that, he was adrad, for he was a passyng bygge man of myghte, and smone he broughte Arthur vnder hym, and rased of his helme and wold haue smyten of his hede.

CAPITULUM XXIII.

There with all came Merlyn and sayd knyghte, hold thy hand. For and thow selle that knyghte thow puttest this reame in the grettest damage that euer was reame. For this knyght is a man of more worship then thou wostet of. Why, who is he saide the knyghte, it is kyng Arthur. Themne wold he haue slayn hym for drede of his wrathe, and heue vp his sword, and therwith Merlyn cast an enchantement to the knyghte that he felle to the erthe in a grete slepe. Themne Merlyn tooke vp kyng Arthur and rode forth on the knyghtes hors. Allas said Arthur what hast thou done merlyn, hast thow slayne this good knyghte by thy craftes, thare luyeth not soo worshipful a knyghte as he was. I had leuer than the stynte of my land a yere that he were on lyue, care ye not sayd Merlyn, for he is holier than ye, for he is but on slepe and will awake within thre houres. I told you said Merlyn what a knyghte he was. Here had ye be slayn had I not ben. Also ther luyeth not a bygger knyghthan he is one, and he shal here after do yow ryght good seruyse & his name is Pellinore, and he shal haue two sones that shal be passyng good men sauf one, they shalle haue no felawe of prowesse and of good lyuyng, and her names shal be Persyual of walys, & Lamerak of walis, & he shal telle yow the name of your owne some begotten of your syster that shal be the destruction of alle this royame.
Rights so the kyng and he departed & wente un tyl an ermyte that was a good man & a grete leche. Soo the heremyte serched all his woundys & gaf hym good salues, so the kyng was there thre dayes & thenne were his woundes wel amendyd that he myght ryde and goo, & so departed, & as they rode Arthur said I haue no sword, no force said Merlyn here by is a sword that shalle be yours and I may. Soo they rode tyl they came to a lake the whiche was a fayr water, and brood. And in the myddes of the lake Arthur was ware of an arme clothed in whyte samyte, that held a fayr sword in that hand, loo said Merlyn yonder is that sword that I spak of, with that they sawe a damoisel goyng vpon the lake, what damoisel is that said Arthur, that is the lady of the lake said Merlyn. And within that lake is a roche, and theryn is as fayr a place as ony on erthe and rychely besene, and this damoysell wylle come to yow anone, and thenne speke ye fayre to her that she will gyue yow that sword.
Anone with all came the damoysel vnto Arthur, and salewed hym, and he her agayne. Damoisel said Arthur, what sword is that, that yonder the arme holdeth aboue the water. I wold it were myne, for I haue no sword. Syr Arthur kyngge said the damoysell, that sword is myn, And yf ye will gyue me a yefte when I aske it yow, ye shal haue it by my feyth said Arthur. I will yeue yow what yefte ye will aske, wel said the damoisel go ye in to yonder barge, & rowe your self to the sword, and take it, and scabart with yow, & I will aske my yefte when I see my tyme. So syr Arthur & merlyn alyght & tayed their horses to two trees, & so they went in to the ship, & whanne they came to the sword that the hand held, syre Arthur toke it vp by the handels, & toke it with hym, & the arme & the had went vnder the water, & so come vnto the lond & rode forth, & thesee syr Arthur sawe a ryche pauelion, what sygnyfyeth yoder pauelion, y' is y' knyztes pauelion seid merlyn y' ye fouzt with last, syr Pellin-nore, but he is out, he is not there, he hath a doo with a knyght of yours that hyght Egglaume, & they haue fouzten to gyder, but at the last Egglaume fledde and els he had ben dede, & he hath chaced hym euenc to Carlyon, and we shal mete with hym anon in the hygh wey, that is wel sayd, said Arthur, now haue I a sword, now wille I wage bataill with hym & be aunged on hym, sir ye shal not so sayd Merlyn, for the knyght is wery of fyghtynge & chacyng so that ye shal haue no worship to haue a do with hym. Also he will not be lyzty matched of one knyzt lyuyng, & therfor it is my coueneil, lette hym passe, for he shal do you good seruyse in shorte tyme & his sones after his dayes. Also ye shal see that day in short space ye shal be rize glad to yeue hym your sister to wedde when I see hym I wil doo as ye adevyse me sayd Arthur. Thenne saye Arthur loked on the sword, and lyked it passyng wel, whether lyketh yow better sayd Merlyn the suerd or the scaubard. Me lyketh better the sword sayd Arthur, ye are more unwyse sayd Merlyn, for the scaubard is worth x of the swerdys, for whyles ye haue the scaubard vpon yow ye shall neuer lese no blood, be ye neuer so sore wounded therfor kepe wel the scaubard alwayes with yow, so they rode vnto Carlyon, and by the wey they met with syr Pellinore, but Merlyn had done suche a crafte, that pellinore sawe not Arthur, and he past by withoute ony wordes. I merueylle sayd Arthur that the knyght wold not speke, syr sayd Merlyn, he sawe yow not, for and he had sene yow ye had not lyghtlyly depaerted. Soo they come vnto Carlyon, wherof his knyghtes were passyngly glad. And whanne they herd of his aventures, they merueilled that he wold iepard his persone soo alone. But alle men of worship sayd it was mery to be vnder suche a chuyetayne that wolde put his persone in aventure as other poure knyghtes dyd.

Capitulum xxvii.

This meane whyle came a messager from kyngge Ryons of North-walys. And kynghe he was of all Ireland and of many Iles. And this was his message gretyynge wel kynghe Arthur in this manere wyse sayenge, that kyngge Ryons had discomfyte and ouercome xi kyngges, and everyche of hem did hym hommage, and that was this, they gaf hym their berdyz clene flayne of, as moche as ther was, wherfor the vol. i.
messenger came for kyng Arthurs bêrd. For kyng Ryons had pur-fyled a mantel with kynges berdes, and there lacked one place of the mantel, wherfor he sente for his bêrd or elvs he wold entre in to his landes, and bremes and sles, & neuer leue tyl he haue the hede and the bêrd. Wel sayd Arthur thow hast said thy message, the whiche is the most vylaynous and lewdest message that euers man hert sente vnto a kyngye. Also thow mayst see, my bêrd is ful young yet to make a purfyl of hit. But telle thow thy kyngye this, I owe hym none homage, ne none of myn elders, but or it be longe to, he shall do me homage on bothe his kneys, or elvs he shall lese his hede by the feith of my body, for this is the most shamefyllest message that euers I herd speke of. I haue aspyed, thy kyng met neuer yet with worshipful man, but telle hym, I wyll haue his hede withoute he doo me homage, thenne the messager departed.

Now is there ony here said Arthur that knoweth kyng Ryones, thenne anseuerd a knyght that hyght Naram. Syre I knowe the kyng wel, he is a passyng good man of his body, as fewe ben luyynge, and a passyng prowde man, and sir doubte ye not, he wille make warre on yow with a myghty puyssaunco, wel said Arthur I shall ordeyne for hym in short tyme.

Capitulum xxviii.

Thenc kyng arthur lete sende for al the chylde born on mony day begote of lorde & born of ladyes, for Merlyn told kyng Arthur that he that shold destroie hym, shold be borne in mony day, wherfor he sent for hem all vpon payn of deth, and so ther were founde many lorde sones, and all were sente vnto the kyngye, and soo was Mordred sente by kyng Lotts wyf, and all were put in a ship to the see, and some were iii weakes old and some lasse. And so by fortune the shyp drofe vnto a castel and was al to ryuen and destroyed the most part sauf that Mordred was cast vp and a good man fonde hym, and nourysched hym tyl he was xiii yere olde, & thenne he brought hym to the Court, as it reherceth afterward toward the ende of the deth of Arthur. So many lorde and barons of this resame were displeasyd, for her children were so lost, and many put the wyte on — Merlyn more than on Arthur, so what for drede and for loue they helde their pees. But whanne the messager came to kynge Ryons, thenne was he woode oute of mesure and purueyed hym for a grete — boost as it rehercyth after in the book of Balyn le saueage that foloweth next after, how by aduenture Balyn gat the swerd.

Explicit liber primus.
ETER the dethe of Utherpendragon regned Arthur his sone, the whiche had grete werre in his dayes for to gete al England in to his hand. For there were many kynges within the realme of England and in Walys, Scotland and Cornewaille. Soo it befelle on a tyme, whanne kyng Arthur was at London ther came a knyght and tolde the kyng ty-dynges how that the kynges Ryons of North-walys had rered a grete nombre of peple, and were entryd in to the land and brente and slewe the kynges true liege peple, yf this be true said Arthur, it were grete shame vnto myn estate, but that he were myghtely withstand, it is trouthe sayd the knyghte, for I sawe the hoost my self. Wel saide the kyng, leta make a crye, that all the lordes knyghtes and gentylmen of armes shold drawe vnto a castel called Camelot in tho dayes, and ther the kyng wold leta make a councel general and a grete Justes. So whan the kyng was come thyder with all his baronage and lodged as they semed best, ther was come a damoisel the whiche was sente on message from the grete lady lyle of auelyon. And whan she came before kyng Arthur, she told from whome she came, and how she was sent on message unto hym for these causes. Thenne she lete her mantel falle that was rychely surred. And themne was she gyrd with a noble swerd wherof the kynge had merueill, and said Damoyesel for what cause are ye gyrd with that swerd, it bisemeth yow now. Now shall I telle yow said the damoyesel. This swerd that I am gyrd with al doth me grete sorowe and combersanunce, for I may not be deluuered of this swerd, but by a knyghte, but he must be a passyng good man of his handes and of his dedes and withoute yloyne or trecherey and withoute treason. And yf I may fynde suche a knyghte that hath alle these vertues, he may drawe oute this swerd oute of the shethe, for I haue ben at kyng Ryons, it was told me ther were passyng good knyghtes, and he and alle his knyghtes haue assayed it and none can spede. This is a grete merueill said Arthur, yf this be sothe, I wille my self assaye to drawe oute the swerd, not presuyenge vpon my self that I am the best knyghte, but that I will begynne to drawe at your swerd in guyng example to alle the Barons that they shall assay euerychone after other when I haue assayed it. Themne Arthur toke the swerd by the shethe and by the gyrdel and pulled at it egrely, but the swerd wold not oute. Sire seid the damoyesell ye nede not to pulle halfe so hard, for he that shall pulle it out shal do it with lytel myghte, ye say wel said Arthur. Now assaye ye al my barons, but beware ye be not defoyled with shame trechery ne gyle, themne it wille not auayle sayd the damoyesell, for he must be a clene knyght withoute yloyne and of a gentil strene of fader syde and moder syde. Moost of all the barons of the round table that were there at that tyme assayed alle by rowe, but ther myght none spede, wherfor the damoyesel made grete sorow oute of mesure and sayd Allas I wende in this Courte had ben the best knyghtes withoute trechery or treason. By my fye the sayth Arthur here are good knyghtes as I deme as ony ben in the world, but theyr grace is not to helpe yow, wherfor I am displeasyd.

Thenne selle hit soo that tyme, ther was a poure knyght with kynge Arthur, that had byn prysoner with hym half a yere & more for alynyng of a knyghte, the whiche was cosyn vnto kynge Arthur, the name of this knyght was called Balen, and by good meanes of the barons he was deluyerd oute of pryson, for he was a good man named of his body, and he was borne in northumberland, and soo he wente pryuely in to the Courte, and sawe this aduenture, wherof hit reysed his herte, and wolde assaye it as other knyghtes dyd, but for he was poure and pourely arayed he put hym not ferre in prees. But in his herte he was fully assured to doo as wel yf his grace happed hym as ony knyght that there was. And as the damoysel toke her leue of Arthur and of alle the barons so departying, this knyght Balen called vnto her and sayd Damoysel I praye yow of your curtosy, suffre me as wel to assay as these lordez though that I be so pourely clothed, in my herte me semeth I am fully assured as somme of these other. And me semeth in my herte to spede ryght wel. The damoysel beheld the poure knyght, and sawe he was a lykely man, but for his poure arrayment she thoughte he shold be of no worship withoute vlyonlye or trechery. And theie she sayd vnto the knyght, sir it nedeth not to put me to more payn or labour, for it semeth not yow to spede there as other haue faulled. A sayr Damoysel said Balen worthynes and good tatches and good dedes are not only in arrayment, but manhood and worship is hyd within mans persone and many a worshipful knyghte is not knowne vnto alle people, and therfore worship and hardynesse is not in arrayment. By god sayd the damoysel ye say sothe, therfor ye shal assaye to do what ye may. Thenne Balen took the swerd by the gyrdel and shethe, and drewe it out easely, and when he lokd on the swerd hit pleasyd hym moche, thenne had the kynge and alle the barons grete merueile that Balen hadde done that auenture, many knyghtes had grete despyn of Balen. Certes said the damoysel, this is a passynge good knyght and the best that euer I found and moost of worship withoute treson, trechery or vlyonly, and many merueyles shalle he
do. Now gentyl and curtois knyght yeue me the swerdel ayene, nay said Balen, for this swerdel wylle I kepe but it be taken from me with force, wel saide the damoysele ye are not wyse to kepe the swerdel from me, for ye shalle sle with the swerdel the best frende that ye haue and the man that ye moste loue in the world, and the swerdel shalle be your destruction. I shal take the aduenture sayd Balen that god wille ordeyne me, but the swerdel ye shalle not haue at this tyme by the feythe of my body, ye shalle repente hit within short tyme sayd the damoysele. For I wold haue the swerdel more for your suaylle than for myne, for I am passyng heuy for your sake. For ye wil not byleue that swerdel shal be youre destruction, and that is grete pyte, with that the damoysele departed makyng grete sorowe. Anone after Balen sente for his hors and armour, and soo wold departe fro the Courte and toke his leue of kynge Arthur, nay sayd the kynge I suppose ye wyll not departe so lustely fro this felauship. I suppose ye are displeased that I haue shewed yow unkyndenes. Blame me the lasse, for I was mys senformed ageynst yow, but I wende ye had not ben suche a knyght as ye are of worship and prowess, and ye wyll abyde in this couerte among my felauship, I shalle so suauence yow as ye shalle be pleased, god thanke your hyhenes saide Balen, your bounte and hyhenes may no man preyse half to the valewe, but at this tyme I must nedes departe, besechyng yow alwey of your good grace. Truly sayd the kynge I am ryght wrothe for your departyng. I pray yow fare knyghte, that ye tary not long, and ye shal be ryght welcomme to me, & to my barons, and I shalle amende all mysse that I haue done ageynst yow. god thanke your grete lordship sayd Balen, and therwith made hym redy to departe. Thenne the moost party of the knyghtes of the round table sayd that Balen did not this sauenture al only by myghte but by wytechraft.

The meane whyle that this knyght was makyng hym redy to departe, there came in to the Court a lady that hyght the lady of the lake. And she came on horsbak rychely byscene, and salewed kynge Arthur, and there asked hym a yeete that he promysed her whan she gaf hym the swerd, that is sothe said Arthur, a gyfte I promysed yow, but I haue forgotten the name of my swerd that ye gaue me. The name of it said the lady is Excalibur that is as moche to say as cut stele, ye saye wel saiide the kynge. Ask what ye wil and ye shall haue it, and hit lye in my power to yeue hit, wel sayd the lady, I ask the heede of the knyghte that hath wonne the swerd, or els the damoysels heede that broughte hit. I take no force though I haue bothe their hedes, for he sleue my broder a good knyzte and a true, and that gentilwoman was causer of my faders deth. Truly said kynge Arthur I maye not graunte neyther of her hedes with my worship, therfor ake what ye wille els, and I shall fullfille your desyre. I wil ake none other thyng said the lady. Whan Balyn was redy to departe he sawe the lady of the lake that by her menes had slayne Balyns moder and he had soughte her thre yeeres, and whan it was told hym that she asked his hede of kynge Arthur he went to her streyte and said eyl be you foode, ye wold haue my hede, and therfore ye shall lese yours, and with hys swerd lyghtly he smote of hir hede before kynge Arthur. alas for shame sayd Arthur why haue ye done so, ye haue shamed me and al my Courte, for this was a lady that I was beholden to, and hyther she came vnder my sauf conduyte. I shalle neuer foryeue you that trespas. Sir said Balen me forthynketh of your displeasyr, for this same lady was the untruest lady lyuynge, and by enchauntement and sorcery she hath ben the destroyer of many good knyghtes, and she was causer that my moder was brente thorow her falsahede and trechery. What cause soo euer ye had said Arthur ye shold haue forborne her in my presence, therfor thynke not the contrary ye shalle repente it, for suche another despyte had I neuer in my Courte, therfor withdrawe yow oute of my Courte in al hast that ye may. Thenne Balen toke vp the heed of the lady and bare it with hym to his hostry, and there he met with his squyer that was sory he had displeasdyd kyng Arthur, and so they rode forth oute of the town. Now said Balen we must departe, take thow this hede and bere it to my frendys, and telle hem how I haue sped, and telle my frendys in Northumberland that my most foo is deed. Also telle hem how I am oute of pryson, and what auëture befelle me at the getyng of this swerd. Alas said the squyar ye are greatlie to blame for to displease kyng Arthur, as for that said Balen I wylle hyhe me in al the hast that I may to mete with kyng Ryons and destroye hym eyther els to dye therfor, and yf it may happe me to wynne hym, thenne wil I kyng Arthur be my good and gracious lord. Where shall I mete with yow saide the squyer, in kyng Arthurs Court said Balen, so his squyer and he departed at that tyne, thenne kyng Arthur and alle the Court made grete doole and had shame of the deth of the lady of the lake, thenne the kyng buryed her rychely.

Capitulum iii.

Ar that tyne ther was a knyghte, the whiche was the kynges sone of Irelond and his name was Launceor, the whiche was an orgulous knyat, and countyd hym self one of the best of the Courte, and he had grete despynge at Balen for the encheuynge of the swerd that ony shold be acounted more hardy or more of prowesse, and he asked kyng Arthur yf he wold gyue hym leue to ryde after Balen and to reuenge the despynge that he had done. Doo your best said Arthur, I am right wroth with Balen, I wold he were quyte of the despynge that he hath done to me and to my Courte. Thenne this Launceor wente to his hostry to make hym redy. In the meane whyle cam Merlyn vnto the Court of kyng Arthur and there was told hym the adventyure of the swerd and the deth of the lady of the lake. Now shall I saye yow said Merlyn, this same damosysel that here standeth that brughte the swerd vnto your Court, I shalle telle yow the cause of her comynge, she was the falsest damosysel that lyueth, say not so said they. She hath a broder a passyng good knyght of prowesse and a ful true man, and this damosysel loued another knyght that helde her to peramour, and this good knyght her broder mett with the knyght that held her to peramour and awle hym by force of his handes. Whan this fals damosysel ynderstood thys, she wente to the lady lyle of Auelione, and besought her of help, to be awengyd on her owne broder.
Capitulum quintum.

And so this lady lyte of Auelion toke her this sword that she broughte with her, and told there shold no man pulle it oute of the sheythe but yf he be one of the best knyghtes of this reame, and he shold be hard and ful of prowessse, and with that sword he shold alle her broder, this was the cause that the damosell came in to this Courte. I knowe it as wel as ye, wolde god she had not comen in to thys Courte, but she came neuer in felauership of worship to do good but alwayes grete harme, and that knyght that hath encheued the suerd shal be destroyed by that suerd, for the whiche wil be grete dammage, for ther lyueth not a knyf of more prowessse than he is, and he shalle do vnto yow my lord Arthur grete honour and kyndnesse, and it is grete pyte he shal not endure but a whyle, for of his strengthe and hardynesse I knowe not his matche lyuynghe. Soo the knyghte of Irelonde armede hym at al poynes, and dressid his sheilde on his sholdre and mounted vpon horesback and toke his sperre in his hand, and rode after a grete passe as moche as his hors myght goo, and within a lytel space on a montayne he had a synghte of Balyne, and with a lowde voys he cryed abyde knyght, for ye shal abyde wheather ye will or nyll, and the sheild that is to fore you shalle not helpe. Whan Balyne herd the noyse, he tourned his hors fyeraly, and saide faire knyghte what wille ye with me, wille ye Juste with me, ye said the Iryshe knyghte, therfore come I after yow, peraunture said Balyne it had ben better to haue holde yow at home, for many a man weneth to putte his enemy to a rebuke, and ofte it falleth to hym self, of what courte be ye sente fro said Balyne. I am com fro the Courte of kynge Arthur sayd the knyghte of Irlond, that come hyder for to reuenge the despyte ye dyd this day to kyng arthur and to his courte. Wel said Balyne, I see wel I must haue adoo with yow that me forthynketh for to greue kyng arthur or ony of his courte, and your quarel is ful symple said Balyne vnto me, for the lady that is dede, dyd me grete dommage & els wold I haue ben loth as ony knyghte that lyueth for to alle a laddy. Make yow redy sayd the knyghte launceor, and dresse yow vnto me, for that one shalle abyde in the feld, theme they toke their speres, and cam to gyders as moche as their horses myght dryue, and the Iryshe knyght smote Belyn on the sheld that alse wente sheuers of his spere, & Belyn hyt hym thorugh the sheld, and the hauberke peresus, & so percyd thurg his body and the hors cropy, and anon torned his hors fryealy and drewe oute his swerd and wyster not that he had alayn hym, and themne he sawe hym lye as a dede corps.

Capitulum vi.

Thenne he lokd by hym and was ware of a damoyzel that came ryde ful fast as the hors myghte ryde on a fayr palfroy, and whan she aspyed that launcor was slayne, she made sorowe oute of me-sure and sayd, O Belyn two bodyes thou hast slayne and one herte and two hertes in one body, and two soules thow hast lost. And therwith she toke the swerd from her loue that lay ded and yffe to the ground in a swowne. And whan she aroos she made grete dole out of mesure, the whiche sorowe greued Belyn passyngly sore, and he wente vnto her for to haue taken the swerd oute of her had but she hulde it so fast, he myghte not take it oute of her hand onles he shold haue hurte her, and sodenly she sette the pomell to the ground, and rofe her self thorow the body. Whan belyn aspyed her dedes he was passyng heuy in his herte and asahmed that so fair a damoysell had destroyed her self for the loue of his deth. Alas sayd Belyn me repetheth sore the deth of this knyght for the loue of this damoyzel, for ther was moche true loue betwixte them bothe, and for sorowe myght not lenger behold hym but torned his hors and loked toward a grete forest and ther he was ware by the armes of his broder Balan, and whan they were mette they putte of her helmes and kysed to gyders and wepte for ioye and pyte. Thenne Balan sayd, I lytel wende to haue met with yow at this sodayne aventure. I am ryght glad of your delueraunce and of youre dolorous prysonement, for a ma told me in the castel of four stones that ye were deluercd, & that man had sene you in the court of kynge Arthur, & therfor I cam hyder in to this countrey, for here I supposed to fynde you, anon the knyzt balyn told his broder of his aduenture of the sword & of the deth of the lady of the lake, & how kyng arthur was displeasyd with hym wherfor he sente this knyzt after me that lyeth here dede, & the deth of this damoysel greueth me sore, so doth it me said Balan, but ye must take the aduenture that god wil ordeyne yow. Truly said Balyn I am ryght heuy that my lord Arthur is displeasyd with me, for he is the moost worshipful knyght that regneth now on erthe, & his loue will I gete or els I wil put my lyf in auenture, for the kyng Ryons lyeth at a syge atte castel Tarabil & thyder will we drawe in all hast to preue our worship & prowess vpon hym. I wil wel said Balan that we do & we wil helpe ech other as bretheren oust to do.

Ca. vii.

Now go we hens said balyn & wel be we met, the mene whyle as they talked ther cam a dwarf from the cyte of camelot on horsbak as moche as he myght & foid the dede bodyes, wherfor he made grete dole & pulled out his here for sorou & saide which of you knyxtes haue done this dede, where by askest thou it said balan, for I wold wete it said the dwarfe, it was I said balyn that slewe this knyght in my defendaут for hyder he cam to chauce me & other I must alee hym or he me, & this damoysel slewe her self for his loue whiche repenteth me, & for her sake I shal owe al wymmen the better loue. Allas said the dwarf thow hast done grete dommage vnto thy self, for this knyght that is here dede was one of the most valyaunts men that lyued, and trust wel balyn the kynne of this knyght wille chace yow thorowe the world tyl they haue slayne yow. As for that sayd Balyn I fere not gretyly, but I am ryght heuy that I haue displeasyd my lord kyng arthur for the deth of this knyght. Soo as they talked to gyders there came a kynge of Cornewalle rydyng, the whiche hyghte kynge Mark. And whanne he sawe these two bodyes dede and vnderstood hou they were dede by the ii knyghtes aboue saide, thenne maade the kynge grete sorowe for the true loue that was betwix them, & said I wil not departe tyl I haue on this erthe made a tombe, and there he pyght his paeulions and soughte thurgh alle the countrey to fynde a tombe, and in a chirche they founde one was fair and rych, & thenne the kyng lete put hem bothe in the erthe & put the tombe vpon hem, and wrote the names of them bothe on the tombe. How here lyeth launceor the kynges sone of Irond that at his owne request was slayne by the handes of balyn, & how his lady colombe and peramoure slewe her self with her loues swerd for dole and sorowe.

The mene whyle as this was a doyng, in cam merlyn to kyng mark seyng alle his doynghe said, Here shalle be in this same place the grettest bataille betwixt two knyghtes that was or euer shall be, and the truest louers, and yet none of hem shalle slee other, and there Merlyn wrote her names vpon the tombe with letters of gold that shold fyghte in that place, whos names were Launcelot de lake, and Trystram. thow art a meruellous man saide kyng Marke vnto Merlyn that spekest of suche meruelles, thou art a boystous man — and an unlykely to telle of suche dedes, what is thy name said kyng Marke, at this tyme said Merlyn I will not telle, but at that tyme whan syr Trystram is taken with his souerayne lady, thenne ye shalle here and knowe my name, & at that tyme ye shal here tydynges that shal not please yow. Thenne said merlyn to balyn thou hast done thy self grete hurt by cause that thow sauest not this lady that slewe her self that myght haue saued her & thow woldest, by the feyth of my body sayd balyn I myght not saue her for she slewe her self sodenly. Me repenteth saide Merlyn by cause of the dethe of that lady thou shalt stykke a stroke most dolorous that euer man stroke excepte the stroke ofoure lorde, for thou shalt hurte the truest knyzt & the man of most worship that now lyueth, & thorow that stroke iii kyngdoms shal be in grete pouerte mysere & wretchednes xii yere, & the knyzt shal not be hoole of that woulde many yeres. thene merlyn toke his leue of balyn & balen said yf I wist it were soth that ye say I shold do suche a peryllous dede as that I wold see my self to make the a lyar, therwith merlyn vanychshed awey sodenly, and thence Balyn and his brother took her leave of Kyng Mark, first said the kyng telle me your name, syr said Balen ye may see he bereth two swordes ther by ye may calle hym the knyght with the two swordes & soo departed kyng marke vnto camclot to kyng Arthur & balyn toke the wey toward kyng Ryons, and as they rode to gyder they mett with Merlyn desguysed but they knewe hym not. Whyder ryde yow said Merlyn, we haue lytel to do saide the ii knyghtes to tell the, but what is thy name said Balen, at this tyme said Merlyn I will not telle it the, it is euyl sene said the knyghtes that thou art a true man that thou wolt not telle thy name, as for that sayd Merlyn, be hit, as it be may I can telle yow wherfor ye ryde this wey for to mete kyng Ryons but it will not auaille you without ye haue my coucseill. A said Balyn ye are Merlyn we wyl be rulyd by your coucseill, come on said Merlyn ye shal haue grete worship & loke that ye do kynlyte for ye shal haue grete nede, as for that said Balen drede yow not we will do what we may.

Thenne Merlyn lodged them in a wode amonge leuys byside the hyhe way & toke of the brydels of their horses & put hem to gras & leid hem doun to reste hem tyllle it was nyhe mydnyyt. Thenne Merlyn badde hem ryse, & make hem redy, for the kyng was nygh them that was stolen away from his hoost with a iii score horses of his best knyghtes & xx of hem rode to fore to warne the lady de Vance that the kyng was comyng, for that nyzt kyng Ryons shold haue layn with her, whiche is the kyng said Balyn, abyde said Merlyn here in a streyte wey ye shal mete with hym & therwith he shewed Balyn & his broder where he rode, anon balyn & his broder mette with the kyng & smote hym doun & wounded hym fyersly & leid hym to the ground, & there they slewe on the ryght hand & the lyfte hand and slewe moo then xi of his men, & the remenaunt fled, thenne went they ageyne to kyng Ryons & wold haue slayn hym had he not yelded hym vnto her grace. Thenne said he thus knyghtes ful of prowesse slee me not, for by my lyf ye may wynne & by my dethe ye shalle wynne noo thyng. Thenne sayd these two knyghtes ye say sothe & trouth, and so leyd hym on an hors lyttar. With that Merlyn was vanysahed and came to kyng Arthur afore hand & told hym how his most enemy was taken and discomfyted, by whome said kyng Arthur, by two knyghtes said Merlyn that wold please your lordship, and to morowe ye shalle knowe what knyghtes they are. Anone after cam the knyght with the two swerdes and balan his broder, and brought with hem kyng Ryons of North Walys and there deleyerd hym to the porters and charged hem with hym, & soo they two returned ageyne in the daunynge of the day, kyng Arthur cam thenne to kyng Ryons and said Syr kyng ye are welcome, by what auenture come ye hyder, syr said kyng Ryons I cam hyther by an hard auenture, who wanne yow said kyng Arthur, syre said the kyng the knyght with the two swerdes & his broder whiche are two merueilous knyghtes of prowesse. I knowe hem not sayd arthur but moche I am beholden to them. A said merlyn I shal telle yow it is balan that encheued the swerd & his broder balan a good knyght, ther lyueth not a better of prowesse & of worthynesse, and it shal be the grettest dole of hym that euere I knewe of knyght, for he shalle not long endure. Alias saide kyng Arthur that is grete pyte for I am moche beholdyng vnto hym, & I haue yll deserued it vnto hym for his kyndenes, nay said Merlyn he shal do moche more for yow, and that shal ye knowe in hast, but syr are ye purueyed said Merlyn for to morne the hooste of Nero kyng Ryons broder wille sette on yow or none with a grete hoost and therfor make yow redy for I wyl departe from yow.

Thenne kyng Arthur made redy his hoost in x batails and Nero was redy in the selde afore the castel Tarabil with a grete hoost, & he had x batails with many mo peple than Arthur had. Thenne Nero had the vaward with the moost party of his peple, & merlyn cam to kyng lot of the yle of Orkeney, and helde hym with a tale of prophecy til Nero and his peple were destoyed, & ther syr kay the sencyal dyd passyngly wel that the dayes of his lyf the worship went neuer frō hym & sir heruys de reuel did merueillous dedes with kyng Arthur, and kyng Arthur slewe that daye xx knyghtes & maymed xl. At that tyme cam in the knyzte with the two swordys and his broder Balan. But they two did so merueillys that the kyng and alle the knyghtes merueilled of them, and alle they that behelde them said they were sente from heuen as angels or deuyls from helle, & kyng Arthur said hymself they were the best knyghtes that ever he sawe, for they gaue suche stroke that all men had wöder of hem. In the meane whyle came one to kyng Lott and tolde hym, whyle he taryd there nero was destroyed and slayne with al his peple. Alas sayd kyng Lot I am ashamed, for by my defaute ther is many a worshipful man slayne, for and we had ben to gyders there hadde ben none hooste vnder the heuen that had ben able for to haue matched with vs. This fayter with his prophecey hath mocked me. Al that dyd Merlyn for he knewe wel that and kyng Lot had ben with his body there at the fyrst bataille, kyng Arthur had be slayne, and alle his peple destroyed, & wel Merlyn knewe the one of the kynges shold be dede that day, & loth was Merlyn that oyi of them both sholde be slayne. But of the twyne, he had leuer kyng Lotte had be slayne than kyng Arthur. Now what is best to doo sayd kyng Lot of Orkeney whether is me better to treate with kyng Arthur or to fyghte, for the gretter party of oure peple are slayne and destroyed. Syr said a knyght set on arthur for they are wery and forfoughten and we be freshe. As for me sayd kyng Lot I wolde euer knyght wolde do his parte as I wold doo myn. And themen they auauenced baners and smoten to gyders and al to sheuered their spers, and arthurs knyghtes with the helpe of the knyght with two swordes & his broder balan put kyng lot & his hoost to the werre. But alwayes kyng Lot helde hym in the forrest frunte & dyd merueillous dedes of armes, for alle his hooste was borne up by his handes for he abode al knyghtes. alas he myght not endure the whiche was grete pyte that so worthy a knyght as he was one shold be ouer-matched that of late tyme afore hadde ben a knyght of kyng Arthurs & wedded the sister of kyng arthur & for kyng Arthur lay by kyng lots wyf the whiche was arthurs syster & gat on her Mordred, therfor kyng Lot held ayest Arthur. So ther was a knyght that was called the knyghte with the straunge beeste, and at that tymhe his ryght name was called Pellinore, the whiche was a good man of prowesse, and he smote a myghty stroke att kynge Lot as he fought with all his enemies, and he fayled of his stroke, and smote the hors neck that he fyle to the grounde with kynge lot. And therwith anon Pellinore smote hym a grete stroke thorow the helme & hede vnto the browes & thenne alle the hooste of Orkeney fled for the deth of kynge Lott, and there were slayn many moders sones. But kynge Pellinore bare the wytte of the deth of kynge Lot, wherfore syr Gawayne reuenged the deth of his fader the x yere after he was made knyght and slewe kynge Pellinore with his owne handes. Also there were slayne at that bataille xii kynes on the syde of kynge Lot with Nero, and alle were buryed in the chirche of saynt Steuyns in Camelot, and the remenaunt of knyghtes and of other were buryed in a grete roche.

So at the enterement cam kynge Lots wyf Morgause with her foure sones Gawayne, Agrauayne, Gaherys and Gareth. Also ther came thyder kyng Uryens syr Ewayns fader and Morgan le say his wyf that was kyng Arthurs syster. Alle these cam to the enterement, but of alle these xii kynes kyng Arthur lete make the tombe of kynge Lot passyng rychely, and made his tombe by his owne, and thanne Arthur lete make xii ymages of laton and couper, & ouer gylt hit with gold in the sygne of xii kynes, & echon of hem helde a tapyr of wax that brent day and nyt, & kyng Arthur was made in sygne of a fygure standyngge aboue hem with a swerd drawn in his hand, & alle the xii fygures had countenaunce lyke vnto men that were ouercome. All this made Merlyn by his subtyl craffe and ther he told the kyng wha I am dede, these tapers shalle brende no lenger, and soone after the adventures of the Sangrayll shalle come among yow and be encheued. Also he told Arthur how Balyn the worshipful knyght shal gyue the dolourous stroke, wherof shalle fall grete vengeaunce. O where is Balen & Balan & Pellinore saide kynge Arthur, as for Pellinore sayd Merlyn, he wyl mete with yow soone. And as for Balyne he wille not be longe from yow, but the other broder wil departe ye shalle see hym no more. By my feyth sayd Arthur they are two merueyllous knyghtes, and namely Balyne passeth of prowesse of ony knyghte that euer I found, for moche beholde am I vnto hym, wold god he wold abyde with me. Syr sayd Merlyn loke ye kepe wel the scauberl of Excalibur, for ye shalle lese no blood whyle ye haue the scauberl vpon yow though ye haue as many woundes vpon yow as ye may haue. Soo afer for grete trust Arthur betoke the scauberl to Morgan le fay his syster, and she lozed another knyght better than her husband knyntge Uryens or knynte Arthur. And she wold haue had Arthur her broder slayne. And therfore she leta make another scauberl lyke it by enchaunte-ment and gaf the scauberl Excalibur to her loute, and the knyghtes name was called Accolon that afer had nere slayne kyntge arthur. After this Merlyn told vnto kyntge Arthur of the prophete, that there shold be a grete batail besside Salyesbury, and Mordred his owne sone sholde be ageynste hym. Also he tolde hym that Basdemegus was his cosyn and germayn vnto kyntge Uryence.

Capitulum xii.

Within a daye or two kynge Arthur was somwhat seke, and he leta pytche his paelione in a medowe, & there he leyd hym done on a paylet to slepe, but he myght haue no rest. Righ as he herd a grete noys of an hors and therwith the kynge lokd oute at the porche of the paelione, and saw a knyght comyng euyn by hym makyng grete dole. Abyde fair syr said Arthur, & telle me wherfor thow makest this sorowe, ye maye lytel amend me said the knyghte and soo passd forth to the castel of Melyot. Anone afer ther cam balen, and when he sawe kynge Arthur, he alght of his hors, and cam to the kynge on foote, and salewed hym, by my hec saide Arthur ye be welcome. Sire ryght now cam rydymge this way a knyght makyng grete moorne, for what cause I can not telle, wherfor I wold desyre of yow of your curteysye and of your gentynes to fetch aseyne that knyght, eyther by force or els by his good wil. I wil do more for your lordship than that said balyn, and so he rode more than a pass and found the knyght with a damoysel in a forest & said sir knyxt ye must come with me vnto kynge Arthur for to telle hym of your sorow, that wille I not, sayd the knyghte, for hit wylle scathe me gretely, and do yow none auaylle, syr sayd Balyn I pray yow make yow redy for ye must goo with me, or els I must fyghte with yow and brynge yow by force, and that were me loth to do. Wylle ye be my waraunt said the knyght and I goo with yow, ye sayde Balyn or els I wylle deye therfore. And so he made hym redy to go with Balyn, and lefte the damoysel stylle. And as they were euyn before kynge Arthurs pavelione, there came one inuyaybel and amste thys knyghte that wente with Balyn thowro oute the body wyth a spere. Alas sayd the knyght I am slayne vnder youre coquyt with a knyght called Garlon, therfor take my hore that is better than yours and ryde to the damoysel and folowe the quest that I was in, as she wylle lede yow and reuenge my deth whan ye may. That shalle I doo sayd Balyn, and that I make a vowe vnto knyghthode, and so he departed from thys knyghte with grete sorowe. Soo kyng Arthur lete berye thys knyght rychely, and made a mensyon on his tombe, how there was slayne Herlews le berbues, and by whome the trechery was done the knyght garlon. But euyn the damoysel bare the truncheon of the spere with her that syr Harlews was slayne with al.

Capitulum xiii.

So Balyn and the damoysel rode in to a forest, & ther met with a knyghte that had ben on huntynge, and that knyght asked Balyn for what cause he made so grete sorowe, me lyst not to telle yow saide Balyn. Now saide the knyghte and I were armed as ye be I wolde fyghte wyth yow, that shold lytel nede sayd Balyn. I am not aferd to telle yow, and told hym alle the cause how it was. A sayd the knyght is this al. Here I ensure yow by the feithe of my body neuer to departe from yow whyle my lyf lasteth, & soo they wente the to the hostry and armed hem, and so rode forth with balyn. And as they came by an heremytage euen by a Chyrche yerd, ther cam the knychte garlon ij municipalities and smote thyss knychte Peryn de mountebelarde thurgh the body with a spere. Allas said the knychte I am slayne by this traytoure knychte that rydeth Inuysyble. Allas said balyn it is not the fyrst despyte he hath done me, and there the heremyte and Balyn beryed the knycht vnder a ryche stone and a tombe royal. And on the morne they fond letters of gold wryten, how syr Gaweyn shalle reuenge his faders deth kyngge Lot, on the kyngge Pellinore. Anone after this balyn and the damoysel rode tyl they came to a castel and there balyn alyght, and he and the damoysel wende to goo in to the castel, and anone as balyn came within the castels yate the portecols fylle doune at his bak, and there felle many men about the damoysel, and wold haue slayne her. When balyn sawe that, he was sore agued, for he myghte not helpe the damoysel, and thenne he wente vp in to the toure and lepte over the wallis in to the dyche, and hurte hym not, and anone he pulled oute his suerd and wold haue fourenten with hem, and they all sayd nay they wold not fyghte with hym, for they dyd no thynge but thold custome of the castel, and told hynm how her lady was seeke, & had layne many yeres, and she myghte not be hole. but yf she had a dysshe of syluer ful of blood of a clene mayde & a kynges daughter, and theryfore the custome of this castel is, there shalle no damoysel passe this way but she shal blede of her blood in a syluer dysshe ful, wel said balyn she shal blede as moche as she may blede, but I wille not lese the lyf of her whyles my lyf lasteth, & soo balyn made her to blede by her good will, but her blood halpe not the lady, and so he & she rested there al nght, & had there ryght good chere, and on the morn they passed on their wayes. And as it telleth after in the sangraylle that syr Percyualis syster halpe that lady with her blood wherof she was dede.

Capitulum xiii.

Thenne they rode thre or fourte dayes and neuer mette with adventure, and by happe they were lodged with a gentyl man that was a ryche man and well at ease. And as they sat at her souper belyn herd ouer complayne greuously by hym in a chayer, what is this noyse said balen, forsothe said his hoost I wyll telle yow. I was but late att a Justynge, and there I Justed with a knyghte that is broder vnto kynge Pellam, and twyes smote I hym doune, & thenne he promysed to quyte me on my best frynde, and so he wounded my sone that can not be hole tyll I haue of that knyghtes blood, and he rydeth alwey Inuyysble, but I knowe not his name. A said Belyn, I knowe that knyght, his name is Garlon, he hath alayne two knyghtes of myn in the same maner, therfor I had lever mete with that knyght than alle the gold in this realme, for the despyte he hath done me, wel said his ooste I shalle telle yow kynge Pellam of lystynesyse hath made do crye in all this countray a grete feest that shal be within these xx dayes, & no knyght may come ther but yf he brynge his wyf wyth hym, or his peramour, & that knyhte youre enemy and myn ye shalle see that daye. Thenne I behote yow sayd Belyn parte of his blood to hele youre sone with alle. We wille be forward to morne sayd his oost. So on the morne they rode all thre toward Pellam, and they had xv dayes Journey or they cam thyder, and that same day began the grete feeste, and soo they alyght and stabled theyr horses, & went in to the Castel, but blynys oost myght not be lete in by cause he had no lady, thenne Belyn was wel receyued & brought vnto a chamber and vnamred hym, and there were brought hym robes to his pleasyr, and wold haue had Balen leue his swerd behynde hym. Nay sayd Balen that doo I not for it is the custome of my Countrey a knyghte alwayes to kepe his wepen with hym and that custome wyle I kepe, or els I wyll departe as I cam, thenne they gaf hym leue to were his swerd, and so he wente vnto the castel, and was sette amonge knyghtes of worship and his lady afore hym. Soone belyn asked a knyght, is ther not a knyghte in this court whos name is Garlon, yonder he goth sayd a knyght, he with the blak face, he is the meruelest knyzt that is now luyynge for he destroyeth many good knyghtes, for he goth Inuyysble. A wel said Balen is that he, the he belyn auyysd hym long yf I slee hym here I shall not scape. And yf I leue hym now peraentur I shalle neuer mete with hym aseyne at suche a steeuen, and moche harmes he wille doo and he lyue. Ther with this Garlon aspyed that this Balen behelde hym, and thenne he came and smote Balyn on the face with the bak of his hand, and sayd knyzt why beholdest thou me so for shame therfor ete thy mete and doo that thou cam for. Thow sayst sothe said Balyn, this is not the fyrst despyte that thou hast done me, and therfor I will doo that I cam for and rose vp fyersly and claue his hede to the sholders, gyue me the truncheon sayd Balyn to his lady where with he slewe your knyghte, anone she gaf it hym, for alwey she bare the truncheon with her. And ther with Balyn smote hym thurgh the body, and sayd openly with that truncheon thow hast slayn a good knyghte, and now it stycketh in thy body. And thenne Balyn called vnto hym his host, sayenge, now may ye fetche blood ynough to hele your sone with all.

Capitulum xv.

Anone all the knyghtes aroos from the tabyl for to set on Balyn, and kynge Pellam hym self aroos vp fyersly, & sayd knyzt hast thow slayn my broder, thow shalt dye therfor or thou departe, wel said balen do it your self, yes sayde kynge pellis, ther shall no ma haue ado with the, but my self for the loue of my broder. Thenne kynge Pellam caust in his hand a grym wepen and smote egrely at balyn, but balyn put the swerd betwixe his hede and the stroke, and therwith his swerd brest in sonder. And whan balyn was wepenles he ranne in to a chamber for to seke somme wepen, and soo fro chamber to chamber, and no wepen he coude fynde, and alweyes kynge Pellam after hym. And at the last he entryd in to a chambyr that was merueilously wel dyzte and rychely, and a beede arayed with clothe of gold the rychest that myghte be thought, and one lyenge theryn, and therby stode a table of clene gold with four pelours of syluer, that bare up the table, and vpon the table stod a merueilous spere straungely wroght. And whan balyn sawe that spere, he gat it in his hand and torne hym to kynge Pellam, and smote hym passyngly sore with that spere that kynge Pellam felle doune in a swounne, and therwith the castel rooste and wallys brake and fylle to the erthé, and balyne felle doune so that he myghte not stere foote nor hand. And so the moost party of the castel that was falle doune thorous that dolorous stroke laye vpon Pellam and balyne thre dayes.

Capitulum xvi.

_Thenne Merlyn cam thyder and toke vp Balyne and gat hym a good hors for his was dede, and bad hym ryde oute of that countrey. I wold haue my damoysel sayd balyne. Loo sayd Merlyn where she lyeth dede & kyng Pellam lay so many yeres sore wounded, and myght neuer be hole tyl Galahad the haute prynce heled hym in the quest of the Sangraille, for in that place was part of the blood of our lord Ihesu cryst that Joseph of Armathe broughte in to this lond, and ther hym self lay in that ryche bed. And that was the same sperre that Longeus smote our lorde to the herte, and kyng Pellam was ngyhe of Joseph kynde, and that was the moost worshipful man that lyued in tho dayes, and grete pyte it was of his hurte, for thorow that stroke torned to grete dole tray and tene. Thenne departed Balyne from Merlyn and sayd in this world we mete neuer no more. Soo he rode forth thorowe the fayr countreyes and Cytees & fond the peple dede slayne on euerie syde, and alle that were on lyue cryed O balyne thow hast caused grete dommage in these cōtryes for the dolorous stroke thow gauist vnto kyng Pellā thre contreyes are destroyed, and doubte not but the vengesance wil falle on the at the last. Whanne Balyne was past tho contrayes he was passyng fayne, so he rode eyzt dayes or he met with auenture. And at the last he came in to a fayr forest in a valey and was ware of a Toure. And there besyde he sawe a grete hors of werre tyed to a tree, and ther besyde satte a fayr kyght on the ground and made grete mornyng and he was a lykely man and a wel made. Balyne sayd God saue yow why be ye so heuy, telle me and I wylle amende it and I may to my power. Syr kyghte said he aseyne thow doest me grete gryef, for I was in mery thoughtes and now thou puttest me to more payne. Balyne wente a lytel from hym, & loked on his hors, themme herd Balyn hym saye thus, a fair lady why haue ye broken my promyse, for thow promysest me to mete me here by none, and I maye curse the that euer ye gaf me this swerd, for with this swerd I slee my self, and pulled it oute, and therwith Balyn sterre vnto hym & took hym by the hand, lete gow my hand sayd the knyght or els I shal slee the, that shal not nede said balyn, for I shal promyse yow my helpe to gete yow your lady, and ye wille telle me where she is, what is your name sayd the knyght, myn name is Balyn le sausage. A sry I knowe yow wel ynough ye are the knyght with the two swerdys and the man of moost prowesse of your handes yuyn, what is your name sayd balen, my name is garnyshe of the mount a poure mans sone. But by my prowesse and hardynesse a duke hath maade me knyght, and gaf me landes, his name is duke Hermel, and his daughter is she that I loue and she me as I demed, hou fer is she hens sayd Balyn, but vi myle said the knyghte. Now ryde we hens sayde these two knyghtes, so they rode more then a pase tyl that they cam to a fayr castel wel wallyd and dyched. I yyle in to the castel sayd Balen, and loke yf she be ther. Soo he wente in and serched fro chamber to chabir, and fond her bedde but she was not there. Thenne Balen loked in to a fayr litil gardyn, and vnder a laurel tre he sawe her lye vpon a quyilt of grene samyte and a knyght in her armes fast halsynge eyther other and vnder their hedes grassse & herbes. Whan Balen sawe her lye so with the fowlest knyghte that euer he sawe and she a fair lady, thenne Balyn wenthe thurgh alle the chambers ageyne and told the knyghte how he fond her as she had slepte fast, and so brought hym in the place there she lay fast slepynge.

And whan Garnyshe beheld hir so lyeng for pure sorou his mouth and nose brast oure on bledyne and with his swerd he smote of bothe their hedes, and thenne he maade sorowe outhe of mesure and sayd O Balyn, Moche sorow hast thow brought vnto me, for haddest thow not shewed me that syght I shold haue passed my sorrow, forsoth said balyn I did it to this entent that it sholde better thy courage, and that ye myght see and knowe her falsheed, and to cause yow to leve loue of suche a lady, god knoweth I dyd none other but as I wold ye dyd to me. Allas said garnysshe now is my sorrow doubel that I may not endure. Now haue I slayne that I moost loued in al my lyf, and therwith sodenly he roose hymself on his own swerd vnto the hylyts. When baleyn sawe that he dresaid hym thens ward, lest folke wold say he had slayne them, and so he rode forth, and within thre dayes he cam by a crosse, & theron were letters of gold wryte that said, it is not for no knyght alone to ryde toward this Castel, thei ne saw he an olde hore gentylman coynyng toward hym that sayd Blyn le Saueage thow passyst thy bandes to come this waye, thei nor torne aseyne and it will ausille the, and he vanysshed away anone, and soo he herd an horne blowe as it had ben the dethe of a best. That blast said Blyn is blowen for me. For I am the pryse and yet am I not dede, anone with al he sawe an honderd ladyes and many knyghtes that welcommed hym with fayr semblant and made hym passyng good chere, vnto his syght and ledde hym in to the castel, and ther was daunsynge and mynstralsye and alle maner of Joyce. Themne the chyf ladie of the castel said, knyghte with the two suerdys ye must haue adoo and Juste with a knyght hereby that kepeth an Iland, for ther may no man passe this waye but he must Juste or he passe, that is an vnhappy customme said Blyn that a knyght may not passe this wey, but yf he Juste, ye shalle not haue adoo but with one knyghte sayd the lady. Wel sayd Blyn syn I shalle therto I am redy but trauel lynge men are ofte wery and their horses to, but though my hors be wery, my hert is not wery. I wold be fayne ther my deth shold be, Syr said a knyght to Blyn, me thynketh your sheld is not good. I wille lene yew a byggar, therof I pray yow, and so he tooke the sheld that was vnknowan and lefte his owne and so rode vnto the Iland, and put hym and his hors in a grete boote, and when he came on the other syde, he met with a damoysel, and she said, O knyght balyn why haue ye lefte your owne sheld, allas ye haue put your self in grete daunger, for by your sheld ye shold haue ben knowen, it is grete pyte of yow as euer was of knyght, for of thy prowesse & hardynes thou hast no felawe lyuynge. Me repenteth said balyn that ever I cam within this Countrey, but I maye not torne now ageyne for shame and what aventure shalle falle to me be it lyf or dethe I wille take the adventure that shalle come to me, & thence he loked on his armour, & vnderstood he was wel armed, and therwith blesid him and mounted vpon his hors.

Thenne afore hym he sawe come rydynge oute of a castel a knyght and his hors trapped all reed and hymself in the same colour. Whan this knyghte in the reed beheld Balyn hym thought it shold be his broder Balen by cause of his two swerdyse, but by cause he knewe not his sheld he demed it was not he. And so they auentryd theyr speres & came merueillously fast to gyders, and they smote other in the sheldes, but there speres and theree cours were soo bygge that it bare doune hors & man that they lay bothe in a swoun. But balyn was brysed sore with the falle of his hors, for he was very of trauaille. And Balen was the fyrst that rose on foote and drewe his swerd and wente toward Balyn, and he aroos and wente ageynst hym. But balan smote balyn fyreste, and he put vp his shelde and smote hym thorow the shelde and tamyd his helme, thenne Balyn smote hym ageyne with that vnhappy swerd and wel nyghe had fellyd his broder Balan, and so they fought ther to gyders tyl theyr brethes faylléd, thenne Balyn loked vp to the castel and sawe the Towres stand ful of ladys. Soo they went vnto bataille ageyne and wounded eueryche other dolefully, and thenne they brethed oftymes, and so wente vnto bataille that alle the place there as they fought was blood reed. And att that tyme ther was none of them bothe but they hadde eyther smynten other seuen grete woundes so that the lest of them myzt haue ben the dethe of the myghtyest gyaunt in this world.

Thenne they wente to bataile ageyn so merueillously that doubte it was to here of that bataille for the grete blood shedynge. And their hawberkes vnnailed that naked they were on euery syde. Atte last balan the yonger broder withdrewe hym a lytel & leid hym doune. Themne said balyn le Sauenage what knyghte arte thow, for or now I found neuer no knyzt that matched me, my name is said he balan broder vnto the good knyght balyn. Alas sayd balyn that euer I shold see this day, and therwith he felle backward in a swoune. Themne balan yede on al four feet and handes and put of the helme of his broder and myght not knowe hym by the vysage, it was so ful hewen and bledde, but whan he awoke he sayd O balan my broder thow hast slayne me and I the, wherfore alle the wyde world shalle speke of vs bothe. Alas sayd Balan that euer I sawe this day that thorow myshaps myght not knowe yow, for I aspyed wel your two swerdys, but by cause ye had another shild I demed ye had ben another knyzt. Alas saide Balyn all that maade an vn-happy knyght in the castel, for he caused me to leue myn owne shelde to our bothes destruction, and yf I myzt lyue I wold destroye that castel for ylle customes, that were wel done said Balan, For I had neuer grace to departe fro hem syn that I cam hyther, for here it happed me to see a knyght that kepeth this Iland, & syn myght I neuer departe, and no more shold ye broder & ye myght haue slayne me as ye haue and escaped your self with the lyf. Ryght so cam the lady of the Toure with iii knygthes and vi ladies and vi yomen vnto them and there she herd how they made her mone eyther to other and sayd we came bothe oute of one tombe that is to say one moders bely. And so shalle we lye bothe in one pytte. So Balan prayd the lady of her gentynesse for his true seruyse, that she wold burye them bothe in that same place there the bataille was done, and she graunted hem with wepyng e it shold be done rychely in the best maner. Now wille ye sende for a preest that we may receyue our sacrament and receyue the blessid body of our lord Jhesu cryst, ye said the lady it shalle be done, and so she sente for a preest and gaf hem her ryghtes. Now sayd balen whan we are buryed in one tombe and the mensyon made ouer us, how ii brethern slewe eche other, there wille neuer good knyght nor good man see our tombe but they wille pray for our soules, & so alle the ladies and gentylwymen wepte for pyto. Themne anone Balan dyed, but Balyn dyed not tyl the mydnyghte after, and so were they buryed bothe, and the lady lete make a mensyon of Balan how he was ther slayne by his broders handes, but she knewe not balyns name.

In the morne cam Merlyn and lete wryte balyns name on the tombe with letters of gold, that here lyeth balyn le Sausage that was the knyzt with the two swerdes and he that smote the dolorous stroke. Also Merlyn lete make there a bedde, that ther shold neuer man lye therin, but he wente oute of his wytte, yet Launcelot de lake fordyl that bed thorow his noblesse, and anone after Balyn was dede, merlyn toke his swerd, and toke of the pomel and set on an other pomel, so merlyn bad a knyght that stode afore hym handeld that swerd, and he assayed, and he myght not handle hit. Themne Merlyn lough, why laugh ye said the knyghte, this is the cause said Merlyn, ther shalle neuer man handle this swerd but the best knyght of the world, and that shalle be syr Launcelot or els Galahad his sone, and Launcelot with this swerd shalle sene the man that in the world he loued best that shalle be syr Gawayne. Alle this he lete wryte in the pomel of the swerd. Thenne Merlyn lete make a brydge of yron & of stele in to that Iland, and it was but half a foote brode, & there shalle neuer man passe that brydge nor haue hardynes to goo ouer, but yf he were a pasyng good man and a good knyght withoute trechery or vylonye. Also the scaubard of Balyns swerd Merlyn lefte it on this syde the Iland that galahad shold fynde it. Also merlyn lete make by his subtilete that Balyns swerd was put in a marbel stone standyng vp ryght as grete as a mylle stone, and the stone houed alwayes aboue the water and dyd many yeres, and so by aduerture it swam downe the streme to the Cyte of Camelot that is in englysshe Wynchestre, & that same day galahad the haute prynce came with kyng Arthur, and soo galahad broughte wyth hym the scaubard and encheued the swerde, that was there in the marbel stone, houynge vpon the water. And on Whytsonday he encheued the swerd as it is reherced in the book of Sægrayll. Soone after this was done Merlyn e to kyng Arthur and told hym of the dolorous stroke that Balyn gaf to kyng Pellam, and how Balyn and Balan foughte to gyders the merueillous batail that euer was herd of, and how they were buryed bothe in one Tombe. Allas said kyng Arthur, this is the grettest pyte that euer I herd telle of two knyztes, for in the world I knowe not suche two knyghtes. Thus endeth the tale of Balyn and of Balan two bretheren born in northüberläd good kniztes.

In the begynnynge of Arthur after he was chosen kyng by aduëture and by grace for the most part of the barons knewe not that he was Uther pendragons sone, But as Merlyn made it openly known. But yet many kynges & lorde helde grete were ayenst hym for that cause. But wel Arthur ouer came hem alle, for the mooste party the dayes of his lyf he was ruled moche by the counceil of Merlyn. Soo it fell on a tyme kyng Arthur sayd vnto Merlyn, my barons wille lete me haue no rest but nedes I muste take a wyf, and I wylle none take, but by thy counceill and by thyne aduys, it is wel done said Merlyn, that ye take a wyf, for a man of your bounte and noblesse shold not be without a wyf. Now is ther ony that ye loue more than another, ye said kyng Arthur. I loue gwen-euer the kynges doughter Lodegrean of the land of Camelerd, the whiche holdeth in his hows the table round that ye told he had of my fader Uther. And this damoysel is the moost valyaunt and fayrest lady that I knowe lyuynge or yet that euer I coude fynde. Syre sayd Merlyn as of her beaute and fayrenes she is one of the fayrest on lyue. -But and ye loued her not so wel as ye doo, I shold fynde yow a damoysel of beaute and of goodenesse that shold lyke yow & plese yow and your herte were not sette. But there as a mans herte is set, he wylle be lothe to retorn, that is trouthe said kyng Arthur, but Merlyn warned the kyng courtely that gweneuer was not holsome for hym to take to wyf, for he warned hym that launcelot shold love her and she hym ageyne, and so he torned his tale to the auentures of Sanegreal. Thenne merlyn desyred of the kyng for to haue men with hym that shold enquere of gweneuer, and so the kyng graunted hym, & Merlyn wente forth vnto kyng Lodgrean of Camyllerd, & told hym of the desyre of the kyng that he wold haue vnto his wyf Gweneuer his daughter, that is to me sayd kyng Lodgreans the best tydyncs that ever I herd, that so worthy a kyng of prowesse and nobleesse wille wedde my daughter. And as for my landes I wylle gyve hym wyst I it myght please hym, but he hath londes ynowe, hym nedeth none, but I shalle sende hym a gyfte shalle please hym moche more, for I shalle gyue hym the table round, the whiche Utherpendragon gaue me, & whan it is ful complete, ther is an C knygyttes & fyfty. And as for an C good knygyttes I haue myself, but I fawte 1., for so many haue ben slayne in my dayes, and so Lodgreans deuyerd his daughter Gweneuer vnto Merlyn, and the table round with the C knygyttes, and so they rode fresshely with grete royalte, what by water and what by land, tyl that they came nygh e vnto london.

Capitulum Secundum.

Whanne kyng Arthur herd of the comyng of gweneuer and th' C knygyttes with the table round, thenne kyng Arthur maade grete Joye for her comyng, and that ryche presente, and said openly this fair lady is passyng welcome vnto me, for I haue loued her longe.
And therfore ther is nothyng so lyef to me. And these knygyttes with the round table pleseen me more than ryght grete rychesse.
And in alle hast the kyng lete ordeyne for the maryage and the Coronacyon in the moost honorable wyse that coude be deuyed.
Now Merlyn said kyng Arthur, goo thow and aspye me in al this land I knygtes whiche ben of most prowess & worship. Within short tyme merlyn had founde suche knyztes that shold fulfylle xx and viii knygtes but no mo he coude fynde. Thenne the Bischop of Caunterbury was fette and he blessid the syeges with grete Royalete and deuocyon, and there sette the viii and xx knygtes in her syeges, and whan this was done, Merlyn said fayr syr ye must al aryse and come to kyng Arthur for to doo hym homage, he will haue the better wil to mayntene yow, and so they arose and dyd their homage, & when they were gone, merlyn fond in euer syeges letters of gold that told the knygtes names that had sytten therin. But two syeges were voyde. And so anone cam yong gawayn & asked the kyng a yefte. Aske said the kyng, & I shal graunte it yow, syr I sakte that ye will make me knyzt, that same day ye shall wedde faire Gueneuer. I will do it with a good wil said kyng arthur & do vnto yow all the worship that I may, for I must by reason ye ar myn neuwe my systers sone.

Ca. iii.

Forth with alle ther cam a poure man in to the Courte and broughte with hym a fayre yonge man of xviii yere of age rydyngge vpon a lene mare, and the poure man asked all men that he met, where shal I fynde kyng arthur, yonder he is sayd the knygtes, wyit thow ony thyngge with hym, ye sayd the poure man, therfor I cam hyder, anone as he came before the kyng he salewed hym and sayd O kyng Arthur the floure of all knygtes and kynges I byseche Jhesu saue the. Syr it was told me that at this tyme of your maryage ye wolde yeue any man the yeftte that he wold aske, oute excepte that were vnresonable, that is trouth said the kyngge suche cryes I lete make, and that will I holde so it apayre not my realme nor myne estate, ye say wel and graciously said the poure man. Syre I aske no thyng els but that ye wil make my rone here a knyghte, it is a grete thyngge thow askest of me said the kyng, what is thy name said the kyng to the poure man, syr my name is Aryes the Cowherd. Whether cometh this of the or of thy rone said the kyng.
Nay syre said Ares, this desyre cometh of my sone and not of me. For I shal telle yow I haue xiii sones, & alle they will falle to what laboure I put them & wille be ryght glad to doo labour, but this child wylle not laboure for me for ony thyng that my wyf or I may doo, but alwyes he wille be shorynge or castyng darte, and glad for to see batailles and to behold knyghtes. And alwyes day and nyghte he desyreth of me to be made a knyght. What is thy name sayd the kynge vnto the yonge man. Syre my name is Tor, the kynge beheld hym fast, and sawe he was passyngly wel vysaged and passyngly wel made of his yeres. Wel sayd kynge Arthur vnto Ares the Cowherd fetche al thy sones afer me that I may see them, and so the poure man did, and al were shapen moche lyke the poure man. But Tor was not lyke none of hem al in shap ne in contenaunce, for he was moche more than ony of hem. Now sayd kynge Arthur vnto the Cowherd, where is the sword he shalle be made knyght withal, it is here sayd Tor, take it oute of the sheathe sayd the kynge, and requyre me to make yow a knyght. Thenne Tor alyght of his mare and pulle oute his sword knelynge and requyrynge the kynge, that he wold maake hym knyght, & that he myghte be a knyght of the table round. As for a knyght I will make yow, & therwith smote hym in the neck with the sword sayeg be ye a good knyght, & so I pray to god so ye may be, & yf ye be of prowesse and of worthynesse ye shalle be a knyght of the table round. Now Merlyn sayd Arthur say whether this Tor shall be a good knyghte, or no, ye syre he ought to be a good knyght, for he is comen of as good a man as ony is on lyue, and of kynges blood, how so syr syd the kynge. I shalle telle yow sayd Merlyn. This poure man Ares the cowherd is not his fader, he is no thyng syb to hym, for kynge Pellinore is his fader. I suppose sayd the Cowherd, fetche thy wyf afer me said merlyn, and she shalle not say nay. Anon the wyf was set which was a fair houswyt, and there she anuerd Merlyn ful womanly, and there she told the kynge and Merlyn that whan she was a maide & went to mylke kyen, ther met with her a sterne knyght, & half by force he had my maidenhede, & at that tyme he bigat my sone Tor, & he toke away from me my greyhound that I had that tyme with me, & saide that he wold kepe the greyhound for my loue. A said the Cowherd I wende not thys, but I may biseue it wel, for he had never no taches of me, sir said Tor vnto Merlyn diabonoure not my moder, syr said merlyn it is more for your worship than hurte, for your fader is a good man & a kyng, & he may ryght wel auauuce you and your moder, for ye were begoten or euer she was wedded, that is trouth said the wyf, hit is the lasse grysef vnto me sayd the Cowherd.

Capitulum Quartum.

So on the morne kyng Pellinore cam to the Court of kyng Arthur, whiche had grete ioye of hym and told hym of Tor, how he was his sone, and how he hadde made hym knyght at the request of the Cowherd. When Pellinore beheld Tor, he plesyed hym moche, so the kyng made gawayne knyght, but Tor was the fyrst he madde at the feast.

What is the cause said kyng Arthur that there ben two places voyde in the syeages. Syre said Merlyn, ther shalle no man syt in the places, but they that shall be of moue worship. But in the sege perilous there shall no man syt therein but one, and yt ther be ony so hardy to doo it he shall be destroyed, & he that shalle sytte there shalle haue no felawe. And therwith Merlyn tooke kyng Pellinore by the hand, and in the one hand next the two seges and the sege peryllous he said in open audyence this is your place and best ye are worthy to sytte therein of ony that is here, there at sat syr gauayne in grete enuy & told Gaherys his broder, yonder knyghte is put to grete worship, the whiche greueth me sore, for he slewe our fader kyngge Lot, therfor I wille alee hym said Gauayne with a swerd, that was sente me that is passyng trenchaunt, ye shall not soo said Gaherys at this tymne, For at this tymne I am but a squyer, and whan I am made knyght, I wol be auengyd on hym and therfor broder it is best ye suffre tyl another tymne that we may haue hym oute of the Courte, for & we dyd so, we shold trouble this hyhe feest. I wyl wel said gauayn as ye wylle.
Capitulum quintum.

Thenne was the hyghe feeste made redy, and the kynge was wedded att Camelott vnto Dame Gweneuer in the chirobe of saynt stouyns with grete solempnyte. And as every man was set after his degree, Merlyn wente to alle the knyghtes of the round table, and bad hem sytte styll that none of hem reminye, for ye shalle se a straunge and a meruellous adventyre. Ryghe so as they sat ther came rennyng in a whyte hert in to the halle and a whyte brachet next hym and xxx couple of black rennyng houndes cam after with a grete crye, and the hert went aboute the table round as he went by other boordes, the whyte brachet boot hym by the buttok & pulled oute a pees, where thurgh the herte lepte a grete lepe, and ouer-threw a knyght that sat at the boord syde, and therwith the knynt aroos & toke vp the brachet, & so went forth oute of the halle & toke his hors and rode his way with the brachet, right so anone cam in a lady on a whyte palfrey & cryed aloude to kyng Arthur. Syre suffre me not to haue this despyte for the brachet was myn that the knyght lad seyve. I maye not doo therwith said the kynge. With this there came a knyght rydynge al armed on a grete hors, and tooke the lady away with hym with force, and euer she cryed and made grete dole. Whanne she was gone the kynge was glad for she made suche a noyse. Nay said merlyn, ye may not leue this aventure so lyghtely. For these aventure must be brought aayne or els it wold be disworship to yow and to your feest. I wyll said the kynge that al be done by your aduys. Thenne saide merlyn lete calle syr gauayne, for he must bryng ageyne the whyte herte. Also syr ye must lete calle Syre Tôr, for he must bryng ageyne the brachet, and the knyght or els alee hym. Also lete calle kyng Pellinore for he must bryng ageyne the lady and the knyght or els alee hym, and these three knyghtes shalte doo meruellous auertures or they come ageyn. Thenne were they called al thre as it reherceth afor, and eueryche of hem toke his charge, and armed them surely. But sir gauayne had the fyrst request, and therfore we wilke begynne at hym.
Capitulum vi.

Syr Gauyn roode more than a pass and gaberyse his broder that roode with hym in stede of a squyer to doo hym seruyse. Soo as they rode they saw two knythes fyghte on horsebak passying sore, so syn Gauyn & his broder rode betwixe them, and asked them for what cause they fought so, the one knyght ansered and sayd, we fyghte for a symple mater, for we two be two bretheren born & begotten of one man & of one woman. Alas said sir Gauyn why do ye so, syn said the elder, ther cam a whyte burt this day & many houdes chaced hym, & a whyte bracket was alwey next hym, and we vnderstood it was auenture made for the hyhe feest of kynge Arthur, and threfore I wold haue gone after to haue wonne me worship, and here my yonger broder said he wolde go after the herte, for he was better knyght than I. And for this cause we se right at debate, & so we thoust to preue whiche of Vs bothe was better knynt. This is a symple cause said syn Gauyn, vncouth me ye shold debate with al & no broder with broder, therfor but ye wil dow by my coûcel I wil haue ado with yow, that is ye shal yelde you vnto me, & that ye go vnto kynge Arthur and yelde yow vnto his grace, sir knynt said the ii bretheren we are forfoughten & moche blood haue we loste thorow our wilfulnesse. And threfore we wolde be loth to haue adoo with yow, thenne do as I will haue yow said syn Gauynye, we willis agree to fulfylle your wylle. But by whom shalle we seye that we be thyder sente, ye maye say, by the knynt that foloweth the quest of the herte that was whyte. Now what is your name sayd Gauynye. Sorkouse of the forest said the elder & my name is sayde the yonger Bryan of the forest and soo they departed and wente to the kynge's Court, and Syr Gauynye on his quest, and as Gauynye foloweth the herte by the crie of the houndes euem afoere hym ther was a grete Ryuer, and the hert swamme ouer, and as syr Gauynye wold folowe after, ther stode a knyght ouer the other syde and sayd, Syr knyghte comma not ouer after this herte, but ye thou wilt Juste with me, I wilis not faile, as for that said sir Gauynye to folowe the quest that I am in, and soo maade his hors to swyemme ouer the water, and anone they gat theire speres, and ranne to gyder ful hard, but syre gauayne smote hym of his hors, and thenne he tornd his hors & bad hym yelde hym. Nay sayd the knyght not so though thow haue the better of me on horsbak. I pray the valyaunt knyght slyghte a foote and matche we to gyders with swerdes. What is youre name said syr gauayne. Alardyn of the Ilyys said the other, thenne eyther dressid her sheldes and smote to gyders, but sir gauayne smote hym so hard thorow the helme that it went to the braynes and the knyght felle doune dede. A said Gaheryse that was a myghty stroke of a yonge knyght.

Capitulum Septimum.

Thene Gauayne and Gaheryse rode more than a pess after the whyte herte, and lete slyppe at the herte thre couple of greyhoundes, and so they chace the herte in to a castel, and in the chyef place of the castel they slewe the hert, syr gauayne and gaheryse folowed after. Ryght soo there came a knyght oute of a chamber with a sword drewe in his hand and slewe two of the greyhoundes euyn in the syyhte of syre gauayne, and the remenaunte he chaced hem with his sword oute of the castel. And whan he cam aseyne he sayd, O my whyte herte, me repenteth that thow art dede, for my sourenaye lady gaf the to me, and euyl have I kepte the, and thy deth shalle be dere bought and I lyue, and anone he wente in to his chamber and armed hym, and came oute fyeraly, & there mette he with syr gauayne, why haue ye slayne my houndes said syr gauayn, for they dyd but their kynde, and leuer I had ye had wroken your angre vpon me than vpon a dom best, thow saist trouth said the knyght I haue ayengyed me on thy houndes and so I wille on the or thow goo. Thenne syr Gauayne slyght a foote and dressid his sheldes and stroke to gyders myghtely, and claue their sheldes and stoned their helmes and brak their hawberkes that the blood ranne doune to their feet. Atte last syr gauayn smote the knyght so hard that he felle to the erthe, and thenne he cryed mercy, and yielded hym, and besought hym as he was a knyghte and gentylman, to saue his lyf, thow shalt dye said sir gauayne for aleyng of my houndes. I wille make amendys said the knyght vnto my power. Syr gauayne wold no mercy haue but valacyd his helme to haue striken of his hede. Ryght soo came his lady oute of a chamber and felle ouer hym, and soo he smote of her hede by mysaunterure. Alias saide Gaheryse that is fowle and shamefully done, that shame shal neuer from yow. Also ye sould gyue mercy vnto them that ask mercy, for a knyxt without mercy is without worship. Syr gauayne was so stonyed of the deth of this fair lady, that he wiste not what he dyd, and said vnto the knyght aryse I wille gyue the mercy, nay nay said the knyght, I take no force of mercy now, for thou hast slayne my loue and my lady that I loued best of alle erthely thynge. Me sere repenteth it said syr gauayn, for I thoughte to stycke vnto the. But now thiow shalt goo vnto kyng Arthur and telle hym of thyne adventures and how thiow arte overcome by the knyghte that wente in the queste of the whyte herte. I take no force said the knyxt whether I lyue or I dye but so for drede of deth he swore to goo vnto kyng Arthur, & he made hym to bere one greyhound before hym on his hors and an-other behynde hym. What is your name saide sir gauayn or we de-partee, my name is said the knyght Ablanor of the marise, soo he dePART ed toward Camelow.

And syr gauayne went in to the castel and made hym redy to lye there al nyght, and wold haue vnarmed hym, what wylle ye doo sayd gaheryse, wylle ye vnarme yow in this Countrey, ye may thynket ye haue manie enmyes here, they had not soone saide that word but ther cat four knyghtes wel armed and assayled syr gauayne hard and said vnto hym thou newe made knyght thou hast shamed thy knyght-hode, for a knyght without mercy is dishonoured. Also thou hast slayne a fayr lady to thy grete shame to the worldes ende, and doubte thou not thou shalt haue grete rede of mercy or thou de-partee from vs. And therwith one of hem smote syr gauayn a grete stroke that nyght he felle to the erthe, and gaheryse smote hym.
agaynse sore, and soo they were on the one syde and on the other, that syr gauayne and gaheryse were in jeopardy of their lyues, and one with a bowe an archer smote syr gauayne thrus the arme that it greued hym wonderly sore. And as they shold haue ben slayne, ther cam four fair ladyes, and besought the knyghtes of grace for syre gauayne, and goodely atte request of the ladyes they gaf syr gauayne, and gaheryse their lyues, & made hem to yelde them as prysoners, thenne gauayne and gaheryse made grete dole. Alas sayd syr gauayne my arme greueth me sore. I am lyke to be maymed and so made his complaynt pytously, erly on the morow ther cam to syr gauayne one of the four ladyes, that had herd alle his complaynte and said syr knynte what chere, not good said he it is your owne defaulte sayd the lady, for ye haue doone a passyng fowlle dede in the sleynge of the lady, the whiche will be grete vlysny vnto yow. But be ye not of kyng Arthurs kyns saide the lady, yes truly sayd syr gauayne, what is your name sayd the lady, ye must tell me or ye passe, my name is gauayne the kyng Lott of Orkeney sone, and my moder is kyng Arthurs syster. A theynne are ye neuewe vnto kyng Arthurs sayd the lady, and I shalle so speke for yow that ye shall haue conduyte to go to kyng Arthur for his loue, and soo she departed, and told the foure knyghtes how theire prysoner was kyng Arthurs neuewe, and his name is syr gauayne kyng Lotts sone of Orkeney, and they gaf hym the hertes heede by cause it was in his quest. Themne anone they deluyerd syr Gauayne vnder this promysye that he shold bere the dede lady with hym in this maner. The hede of her was hanged aboute his neck and the hole body of hyr lay before hym on his hors mane. Ryght soo rode he forth vnto Camelot. And anone as he was come merlyn desyre of kyng Arthur y' Syre Gauayne shold be sworne to telle of alle his auentures, and how he sleue the lady, and how he wold gyue no mercy vnto the knyght, where thurgh the lady was slayne. Themne the kyng and the queene were gretyly displeasyd with syr gauayn for the sleynge of the lady. And ther by ordenaunc of the queene ther was set a quest of ladyes on syr gauayn, and they juged hym for euer whyle he lyued to be with all ladyes & to fyste for her quarels, & that euer he shold be curteys, & neuer to refuse mercy to hym, that asketh mercy. Thus was gauyne sworne vpon the four euangelystes that he shold neuer be ageynst lady ne gentilwoman, but yf he fought for a lady, and his aduersary foust for another. And thus endeth the aventure of syr gauyn that he dyd at the maryage

Capitulum ix.

Than Syre Tor was redy he mounted vpon his hors bak, and rode after the knyght with the brachet, so as he rode he mette with a dwarf sodenly, that smote hyis hors on the bede with a staf, that he wente backward his spere lengthe. Why dost thou so said syr Tor, for thou shalt not passe this way, but yf thou Juste with yonder knyghtes of the pavelions. Thenne was Tor ware where two pavelions were, & grete sperys stood oute, and two sheldes henge on trees by the pavelions. I may not tary said syr Tor, for I am in a quest that I must nedes folowe, thou shalt not passe said the dwarf, and therwith alle he blewse his horne, thenne ther cam one armed on horsbak, and dressyd his sheld, and cam fast toward Tor, and he dressid hym ageynst hym, and so rame to gyders that Tor bare hym from his hors, and anone the knyght yeld hym to his mercy. But syr I haue a felawe in yonder pavelione that wille haue adoo with yow anone, he shall be welcome said syr Tor. Thenne was he ware of another knyght comyng with grete raundon, and eche of them dressid to other, that merueille it was to see, but the knyght smote syr Tor a grete stroke in myddes of the sheld that his spere all to scheuered. And syr Tor smote hym thurgh the sheld by lowe of the sheld that it wente thorow the coost of the knyzt, but the stroke slewe hym not. And therwith syr Tor alyght & smote hym on the helme a grete stroke, and therwith the knyght yelded hym and besought hym of mercy. I wille wel said syr Tor. But thou and thy felawe must goo vnto kynge Arthur, and yelde yow prysoners vn to hym, by whome shall we say are we thyder sente, ye shall say by the knyght that wente in the quest of the knyght that wente with the brachet. Now what be your ii names said syr Tor, my name is sayd the one Sire Felot of Langduk, & my name is said the other Sir Pety-pase of Wynchylse. Now go ye forth saide syre Tor and god sped e eyw & me. Thenne cam the dwarf and saide vnto syr Tor, I praye eyow gyue me a yefte. I wylle wel said syr Tor, aske, I aske no more saide the dwarf, but that ye wille suffre me to doo yow seruyse, for I will serue no more recreant knyghtes. Take an hors said syr Tor and ryde on with me. I wote ye ryde after the knyght with the whyte brachet, and I shalle brynge yow there he is sayd the dwerf.
And soo they rode thorow oute a forest, and at the last they were ware of two pauelions euen by a pryory with two sheles. And the one shylede was enewed with whyte, and the other shelede was reed.

Capitulum x.

There with syr Tor alyghte and toke the dwarf his glayue, and soo he cam to the whyte pauelione, and sawe thre damoysels lye in it, and one paylet slepyng, & so he wente to the other pauelione, and found a lady lyeng slepyng therin. But ther was the whyte brachet that bayed at her fast, and therwith the lady yede oute of the pauelione & all her damoysels. But anone as syr Tor aspyed the whyte brachet, he took her by force and took her to the dwerf, what, wille ye so sayd the lady take my brachet from me, ye sayd syr Tor, this brachet haue I sought from kynge Arthurs Courte hyder, well said the lady, knyght ye shalle not go fer with her, but that ye shalle be mette and greued. I shall abyde what aventures that cometh by the grace of god, and so mounted vpon his hors, and passed on his way towarde Camelot, but it was so nere nyght he myzt not passe but lytel fether, knowe ye ony lodgyng said Tor, I knowe none said the dwarf, but here bysides is an hermytage, and there ye muste take lodgynge as ye fynde. And within a whyle they cam to the hermytage & took lodgyng, and was there gras otys and breed for their horses soone it was sped, and full hard was their souper but there they rested hem al nyght tyl on the morne, and herd a mass deuotely, and tooke their leue of the hermyte, and syre Tor prayed the hermyte to pray for hym, he sayd he wold and betooke hym to god. And soo mounted vpon horsbak and rode towards Camelot a longe whyle, with that they herd a knyghte calle lowde that came after hem, and he sayd knyghte abyde, & yeilde my brachet that thow took from my lady. Syr Tor retorned aseyne, and behelde hym how he was a semely knyghte and wel horsed and wel armed at al poyntes, thenne Syre Tor dressyd his shielde and took his spere in his handes and the other cam fyersly vpon hym, and smote bothe hors & man to the erthe, anone they aroos lyghtely and drewe her swerdes as egrely as lyons and put their sheldes afore them and smote thorow the sheldes that the cantels felle of bothe partyes. Also they tamyd their helmes that the hote blood ranne oute, and the thycy maylles of their hawberkes they carfe and rofe in sonder that the hote blood ranne to the erthe, and both they had many wounedes and were passyng wery. But syr Tor aspyd that the other knyght faynted, and thenne he sewed fast vpon hym and doubled his strokes and garte hym go to the erthe on the one syde, thenne Syre Tor bad hym yeilde hym, that wille I not sayd Abilleus whylle my lyf lasteth and the soule is within my body onles that thou wilt yeue me the brachet, that wyle I not doo sayd syre Tor, for it was my quest to brynyge aseyne thy brachet, the or bothe.

With that cam a damosuel rydyng on a palfrey as fast as she myzt dryue and cryed with a lowde voys vnto Syre Tor, what wille ye with me sayd syr Tor. I bysche the said the damosuel for kynga Arthurs loue, gyue me a yefte. I requyre the gentyl knyght as thow arte a gentilman. Now said Tor, Aske a yefte and I wille gyue it yow, gramerice said the damosuel. Now I aske the hede of the fals knyght Abilleus, for he is the mooste outragious knyght that lyueth & the gretttest murtherer. I am loth seid syr Tor of that gyfte I haue gyuen yow, lete hym make amendys in that he hath trespaced vnto yow, now said the damosuel he may not, for he slewne myn owne broder afore myn owne eyen that was a better knyght than he, and he hadde had grace, and I kneeleed half an houre afore hym in the myre for to saue my broders lyf that had done hym no dammage but fought hym by auenture of armes, and so for al that I coude do, he stroke of his hede, wherfore I requyre the as thow arte a true knyght to gyue me my yefe or els I shal shame the in al the Court of kynge Arthur, for he is the falsest knyght lyuyngge and a grete destroyer of good knyghtes. Thenne whan Abelleus herd this, he was more aferd, and yielded hym and asked mercy. I maye not now saide syr Tor, but yf I shold be founde fals of my promesse, for whyle I wold haue taken you to mercy, ye wold none aske but yf ye had the brachet ageyn that was my quest. And ther with he tooke of his helme, and he aroos and fled, and syr Tor after hym and amote of his hede quyte. Now syr said the damoysele, it is here nyght. I pray yow come & lodge with me here at my place, it is here fast by. I will wel said sir Tor, for his hors and he had fered euyl syn they departed from Camelot, and soo he rode with her and had passyng good chere with her, and she hadde a passyng fair old knyght to her husband that made hym passyng good chere and wel easyd bothe his hors and he, and on the morne he herd his masse and brake his fast and tooke his leue of the knyghte and of the lady that besought hym to telle hem his name. Truly he said my name is syr Tor that was late made knyght, and this was the first queste of armes that euer I dyd to bryng ageyn that this knyght Abelleus toke away fro kynge arthurs courte. Ofayr knyght said the lady and her husband, and ye come here in oure marches, come and see oure poure lodgyngge, and it shalle be alwayes at your commandement. Soo syre Tor departed and came to Camelot on the thyrde day by noone, and the kynge & the queene & alle the Courte was passyng payne of his comyng and made grete ioye that he was come ageyne, for he wente from the Court with lytel socour, but as kynge Pellinore his fader gaf hym an old courser, and kynge Arthur gaf hym armoure and a swerd, and els had he none other socour, but rode so forthe hym selfe alone. And thence the kynge and the queene by merlyne aduys made hym to swere to telle of his auentures, and soo he told and made pryeues of his dedes as it is afore reherced, wherfor the kynge and the queene made grete ioye, nay nay saide Merlyn these ben but Japes to that he shalle doo, for he shalle preue a noble knyght of prowesse as good as ony is luyng and gentyl and curtsey & of good tatches and passyng true of his promiss, and neuer shalle outrage, where thorow Merlyn's wordes kynge Arthur gaf hym an eridome of londes that felle vnto hym, and here endeth the quest of Syr Tor kynge Pellenors sone.

Capitulum xii.

Thenne kynge Pellenore armed hym and mounted vpon his hors and rode more than a paas after the lady that the knyst ladde away. And as he rode in a forest, he sawe in a valey a damysel sitte by a welle and a wounded knyght in her armes, and Pellenore salwe her. And whan she was ware of hym she cryed ouer lowde, helpe me knyghte for crystes sake kynge Pellenore & he wold not tarye he was so eger in his quest, and euer she cryed an C tymes after help. Whanne she sawe he wold not abyde, she prayd vnto god to sende hym as moche nede of help as she had, and that he myst fele it or he dyed. Soo as the book telleth the knyght there dyed that there was wounded, wherfor the lady for pure sorowe slewe her self with his sword. As kynge Pellenore rode in that valey he met with a poure man a labourer. Sawest thou not said Pellenore a knyghte rydyng and ledyng awye a lady, ye said the man. I sawe that knyght and the lady that made grete dole. And yonder bynethe in a valey ther shal ye see two pauelions and one of the knystes of the pauelions chalengyd that lady of that knyght and sayd she was his coynere, wherfor he shold lede her no further. And soo they waged bataill in that quarel, the one saide he wold haue her by force, and the other said he wold haue the rule of her by cause he was her kynnesman and wold lede her to her kyn, for this quarel he lefte them fyghtynge. And yf ye wille ryde a paas ye shalle fynde them fyghtynge, and the lady was beleft with the two squyers in the pauelions, god thanke the sayd kynge Pellenore. Thenne he rode a wallop tyll he had a syght of the two pauelions and the two knyghtes fyghtynge, anon he rode vnto the pauelions, and sawe the lady that was his quest, and sayd fayre lady ye must goo with me vnto the court of kynge Arthur. Syr knyght said the two squyers that were with her yonder are two knyghtes that fyghte for thys lady, goa thyder and departhe them, and be agreed with hem, & thenne may ye haue her at your pleasyr, ye say wel sayd kynge Pellenore. And anone he rode betwixt them and departed hem and asked hem the causes why that they fought. Sir knyght said the one, I shalle telle yow, this lady is my kynneswoman nygh myn auntes daughter. And whan I herd her complayne that she was with hym maulgre her hede, I waged bataille to fyghte with hym. Syre knyght sayd the other whose name was Hontzlake of Wentland, and this lady I gat by my prowesse of armes this day at Arthurs courte, that is vntruly said, said kynge Pellenore, for ye cam in sodenly ther as we were at the hyghe feest and tooke awey this lady or ony man myght make hym redy and therfore hit was my quest to brynge her ageyne and yow bothe, or els the one of vs to abyde in the felde, therfor the lady shalle goo with me, or I wille dye for it, for I haue promysed hit kynge Arthur. And therfor fyghte ye no more, for none of yow shalle haue no parte of her at this tyme. And yf ye lyst to fyzte for her, fyzte with me, and I wille defende her; wel said the knyghtes make you redy, and we shalle assaille yow with al our power. And as kynge Pellenore wold haue put his hors fro them syr Hontzlake roode his hors thorow with a swerd and said, Now art thow on foote as wel as we are. Whan kynge Pellmore aspyed that his hors was slayne, lyztylye he lepte from his hors, and pulld oute his swerd, and put his sheld afor hym, and sayde knyghte kepe wel thy heede, for thow shalt have a buffet for the slayng of my hors. So kynge Pellenore gaf hym suche a stroke vpon the helme that he clafe the hede doune to the chynne that he fylle to the erthe dede.

And them he torne hym to the other knyzte that was sore wounded, but whan he sawe the others buffet, he wold not fyghte, but kneled doune and sayd take my cosyn the lady with yow at youre request, and I requyre yow as ye be a true knyghte, put her to no shame nor vylynny. What sayd kyng Pellenore wylle ye not fyghte for her, no syr sayd the knyghte I wylle not fyghte with suche a knyte of prowesse as ye be, wel said Pellenore, ye say we, I promysye yow she shall haue no vylynny by me as I am true knyght, but now me lacketh an hors said Pellinore, but I wylle haue honts-\n\nlakes hors, ye shalle not nede sayd the knyght, for I shalle gyue yow \nsuche an hors as shalle please yow, so that ye wille lodge with me, for it is nere ngyhte. I wille wel sayd kyng Pellenore abyde with yow al ngyhte, and there he hadde with hym ryght good chere, and faryd of the best with passyng good wyne and had mery rest that ngyhte. And on the morne he herd a masse and dyned. And thonne was broughte hym a fayre bay courser, and kyng Pellenore assed sette vpon hym. Now what shalle I calle yow said the knyght in as moche as ye haue my cosyn at your desyre of your quest. Syr I shalle telle yow my name is kyng Pellenore of the Ilys and knyghte of the table round. Now I am glad said the knyght that suche a noble man shalle haue the rule of my cosyn. Now what is your name said Pellenore, I pray yow telle me. Syr my name is syr Meliot of Logurs, and this lady my cosyn hyght Nymue, and the knyghte that was in the other pauelione is my sworne broder a passyng good knynte and his name is Bryan of the Ilys, and he is ful loth to do wronge, and ful lothe to fyghte with ony man, but yf he be sore soust on, so that for shame he may not leue it. It is meruei said Pellinore that he wille not haue adoo with me, syr he wil not haue adoo with no man but yf it be at his request. Brynge hym to the Courte said Pellenore one of these dayes. Syr we wylle come to gyders, and ye shalle be welcome said Pellinore to the Courte of kyng Arthur, and grely allowed for your comynge, and so he departed with the lady, & brouzte her to Camelot. Soo as they rode in a valey it was ful of stones, and there the ladyes hors stumbled and threwe her doun that her arme was sore brysed and nere she swound for payne. Allas syr sayd the lady myn arme is out of lythe wher thowor I must nedes reste me, ye shalle wel said kyng Pellenore, and so he alyzt vnder a fayr tree where was fayr grasse and he put his hors thereto, and so leyd hym vnder the tree, and slepte tyi it was ngyhte ngyhte. And whan he awok, he wold haue ryden. Sir said the lady it is so derke that ye may as wel ryde backward as forward, soo they abode styll & made there their lodging. Thenne sylr Pellenore put of his armour, theire a lytel afore mydnyzt they herd the trottyng of an her, be ye styll said kyng Pellenore, for we shalle here of somme aventure.

And ther with he armed hym, so ryght euyn afore hym ther met two knyghtes, the one cam fowward Camelot, and the other from the northe, and eyther salewed other, what tydynes at Camelot sayd the one, by my hede saide the other ther haue I ben & aspyed the courte of kyngge Arthur, And ther is suche a felauship they may neuer be broken, and wel nyghe al the world holdeth with Arthur, for ther is the flour of chyualrie. Now for this cause I am rydyng in to the north to telle our chuyetaynys of the felauship that is withheld with kyngge Arthur, as for that said the other knyght I haue brought a remedy with me that is the grettet poysone that euer ye herd speke of & to Camelot wyll I with it, for we haue a frend ryght nyghe kyngge Arthur and wel cherysshed that shal poysone kyngge Arthur, for so he hath promysed oure chuyetaynys & receyued grete yeftes for to do it. Beware said the other knyght of Merlyn, for he knoweth alle thynges by the deuyls crafte, therfore wille I not lete it said the knyghte, & so they departed in sonder. Anone after Pellinore maade hym redy and his lady and rode toward Camelot. And as they cam by the wel there as the wounded knyght was and the lady, there he fond the knyghte and the lady eten with lyons or wyld beeistes al saufe the hede, wherfor he made grete sorowe and wepte passyng sore and said Alias her lyf myghte I haue saued, but I was so fyers in my quest therfore I wold not abyde. Wherfore make ye suche doole said the lady. I wote not said Pellinore, but my herte morneth sore of the deth of her for she was a passyng fayr lady and a yonge. Now wylye ye doo by myne aduys said the lady, take this knyghte and lete hym be buryd in an heremytage, and thene take the ladys hede and bere it with yow vnto Arthur. Soo kyng Pellinore took this dede knyght on his sholders, and broughte hym to the heremytage and charged the heremye with the corps, that seruyse shold be done for the soule, and take his harneyes for your payne, it shalle be done said the heremye as I wille ansuer vnto god.

And ther with they departed and cam there as the heade of the lady lay with a fair yelow here that greued kyng Pellinore passyngly sore whan he loked on hit, for moche he cast his herte on the vysage. And soo by none they came to Camelot, and the kyng and the quene were passyng fayn of his comynge to the Courte. And there he was made to swere vpon the four euangelystes to telle the trouth of his quest from the one to the other. A syr Pellinore sayd quene Gweneuer ye were gretely to blame that ye saued not this ladyes lyf. Madame said Pellinore ye were gretely to blame and ye wold not saue your owne lyf & ye myzt, but sauf your plesair I was so furuous in my quest that I wold not abyde, & that repenteth me & shal the dayes of my lyf. Truly saide Merlyn ye oust sore to repente it, for that lady was your owne douzter begoten on the lady of the rule, & that knyght that was dede was her loue, and shold haue wedded her, and he was a ryght good knyght of a yonge man and wold haue preued a good man, & to this court was he comyng & his name was sir Myles of the lauids, & a knyzt cam behynde hym, & slewe him with a spere & his name is Lorayne le sauage a fals knyzt & a coward, & she for grete sorow & dole slewe her self with his swerd, and her name was Eleyne. And by cause ye wold not abyde and helpe her, ye shalle see youre best frende faylle yow whan ye be in the grettest distresse that euer ye were, or shalle be. And that penaice god hath ordeyned yow for that dede, that he that ye shalle most truste to of ony man alyue, he shalle leue yow ther ye shalle be alayne. Me forthynketh said kyng Pellinore that this shalle me betyde but god may fordoow wel desteny. Thus whan the quest was done of the whyte herte, the whiche folowed syr gawayne and the quest of the brachet folowed of syr Tor Pellenors sone, & the quest of the lady that the knyghte tooke aweye, the whiche kyng Pellinore at that tyme folowed. Thenne the kyng stablyssed all his knyghtes and gaf them that were of londes not ryche, he gaf them londes, and charged hem neuer to doo outragyousyte nor mordre, and alweyes to flee treason. Also by no meane to be cruel, but to gyue mercy vnto hym that asketh mercy vpon payn of forfeiture of their worship and lordship of kyng Arthur for euermore, and alweyes to doo ladyes, damoysele, and gentylwymmen socour vpon payne of dethe. Also that no man take noo bataile in a wrongful quarle for noo lawe ne for noo worlde goodes. Vnto this were all the knyghtes sworne of the table round both old and yong. And euer yere were they sworne at the hyghe feest of Pentecost.

OO after these questys of Syr Gawyne, Syre Tor, and kyng Pellinore, It felle so that Merlyn felle in a dottage on the damoisel that kyng Pellinore broughte to Courte, and she was one of the damoysels of the lake that hyzte Nyneue. But Merlyn wold lete haue her no rest but alweyes he wold be with her. And euer she maade Merlyn good chere tyl she had lemed of hym al maner thynge that she desyred and he was assoted vpon her that he myghte not be from her. Soo on a tyme he told kyngy Arthur that he shold not dure longe, but for al his craftes he shold be put in the etho quyck and so he told the kyng many thynge that shold befalla, but alleways he warned the kyng to kepe wel his swerd and the saubard, for he told hym how the swerd and the saubard shold be stolen by a woman from hym that he most trusted. Also he told kyngy Arthur that he shold mysse hym, yet had ye leuer than al your landes to haue me ageyne. A sayd the kyngy, syn ye knowe of your adventure puruey fro hit, and put away by your craftes that mysaunture. Nay said Merlyn it wylle not be, soo he departed from the kyng. And within a whyle the damoyel of the lake departed, and Merlyn wente with her euermore where some euer she wente. And oftymes merlyn wold haue had her pryueley awy by his subtyle craftes, thenne she made hym to swere that he shold never do none enchantement vpon her yf he wold haue his wylle. And so he sware. so she and Merlyn wente ouer the see vnto the land of Benwyck there as kyng Ban was kyng that had grete ware ageynst kyng Claudas, and there Merlyn spake with kyng Buns wyf a fair lady and a good, and her name was Elayne, and there he sawe yonge Launcelot, there the quene made grete sorowe for the mortal were y' kyng Claudas made on her lord and on her landes. Take none heuynesse said Merlyn, for this same child within this xx yere shall reuenge yow on kyng Claudas that all Cristendom shalle speke of it. And this same child shalle be the moost man of worship of the world, and his fyrst name is Galahad, that knowe I wel said Merlyn. And syn ye haue confirmed hym Launcelot, that is trouthe said the quene, his fyrst name was Galahad. O Merlyn said the quene shalle I lyue to see my sone suche a man of prowesse, ye lady on my parel ye shal se hit, and lyue many wynters after. And soo soone after the lady and Merlyn departed, and by the waye Merlyn shewed her many wollres, and cam in to Cornewaille. And alwyseys Merlyn lay aboute the lady to haue her maydenbode, and she was euer passyng wery of hym, and fayne wold haue ben deluyerd of hym, for she was aferd of hym by cause he was a deyls sone, and she coude not beskyfte hym by no meane.

And soo on a tyme it happe that Merlyn shewed to her in a roche where as was a greete wonder, and wrouhte by enchantement that wente vnder a grete stone. So by her subtyle wyrchynge she maade Merlyn to goo vnder that stone to lete her wete of the meruelles there, but she wrouhte so ther for hym that he cam neuer oute for alle the crafte he coude doo. And so she departed and lefte Merlyn.
Capitulum Secundum.

And as kyng Arthur rode to Camelot, and helde thar a grete feest with myrthe and Joye, so soone after he retorne vn to Cardoylle, and ther cam vn to Arthur newe tydynges that the kyngge of Denmarke and the kyngge of Ireland that was his broder and the kyngge of the vale and the kyngge of Soleyse, and the kyngge of the yle of Longtaynse, al these fyue kynges with a grete host were entrid in to the lëd of kyngge Arthur and brente and slewe clene afore hem, both Cytees and castels that it was pylte to her. Alas sayd Arthur yet had I neuer este one monethe syn I was crownd kyng of this land. Now shalle I neuer reste tyl I mete with tho kynges in a fayre feld, that I make myn auowe for my true lyege peple shalle not be destroyed in my defaute, goo with me who wille and abyde who that wylle. Thenne the kyngge lete wryte vn to kyngge Pellenore and prayd hym in alle haste to make hym redy with suche peple as he myght lyztlyest rere and hye hym after in al hast. All the Barons were pryuely wrothe, that the kyngge wold departe so sodenly, but the kyngge by no meane wold abyde, but made wrytyng vn to them that were not there, and bad them hye after hym suche as were not at that tyne in the Courte. Thenne the kyngge came to quene gwen-euer and sayd lady make yow redy, for ye shall goo with me, for I may not longe myssee yow, ye shal cause me to be the more hardy, what aventure so befalle me. I wille not wete my lady to be in no jeopardy. Sire said she I am at your commaundement, and shalle be redy what tyne so ye be redy. So on the morne the kyngge and the quene departid with suche fielusship as they hadde, and came in to the Nordhe in to a forest besyde humber and there lodged hem.

Whanne the word & tydynge came vn to the fyue kynges aboue sayd that Arthur was besyde humber in a foreste there was a knyght broder vn to one of the fyue kynges that gafe hem this coun-ceille, ye knowe wel that syre Arthur hath the floure of Chyualrye of the world with hym as it is preued by the grete bataille he dyd with the xi kynges. And therfor hye vn to hym nyghte and daye tyl that we be nyghe hym, for the lenger he taryeth the bygger he is, and we euer the waiker. And he is so couragious of hym self that he is come to the felde with lytel peple. And therfore lete vs set vpon hym or day and we shalle see doune of his knyghtes ther shal none escape.

Capitulum Tercium.

Unto this councaille these fyue kynges assented, and so they passed forth with her host thorow North walis and came vpon Ar-thur by nyghte and sett upon his host as the kynge and his knyghtes were in their paelions, kynge Arthur was vnarmed, and had leid hym to rest with hys quene Gweneuer. Sir said syr kaynus it is not good we be vnarmed, we shalle haue no nede said syre Gwayne and Syr Gryfet that laye in a lytel paelione by the kynge.

With that they herd a grete noyse and many cryed treson treson. Allas said kynge Arthur we ben bitrayed. Vnto armes felawes themne he cryed, so they were armed anone at al poyntes. Thenne cam ther a wounded knyghte vnto the kynge & saide syr saue your self and my lady the quene for our hooste is destroyed and moche peple of ours alayne. Soo anone the kynge and the quene and the thre knyghtes took her horses & rode toward humber to passe ouer it, and the water was so rough that they were asewd to passe ouer. Now may ye chese sayd kynge Arthur whethere ye wille abyde and take the adventur on this syde, for and ye be taken, they wille alayne yow. It were me leuer sayd the quene to dye in the water than to faile in your enemies handes & there be alayne. And as they stode soo talkynge, syr kaynus sawe the fyue kynges comynge on horsbak by hem self alone with her speres in her handes euem toward hem, loo saied syr kaynus yonder be the fyue kynges, lete vs go to them and matche hem, that were foly sayd sire gwayne, for we are but thre and they ben fyue, that is trouthe saied syre Gryfet. No force said syr kay I wille vndertake for two of them, and themne may ye thre vndertake for the other thre, and ther with al syr kay lete his hors reme as fast as he myghte and strake one of them thorow the shelde, and the body a fadom that the kynge felle to the erthe stark dede. That sawe syr Gawayne and ranne vnto another kyng so hard that he smote hym thurgh the body. And ther with all kyng Arthur ran to another, and smote hym thurgh the body with a spere that he fylle to the erthe dede. Thenne syr Gryffet ranne vnto the iii kyng and gaf hym suche a falle that his neck brake. Anone syr kay ranne vnto the fytthe kyenge and smote hym so hard on the helme that the stroke clae the helme and the hede to the erthe, that was wel strykyn sayd kyngz Arthur, and worshipfully hast houle and huy promesse, therfor I shal honoure the, whyle that I lyue, and ther with all they set the quene in a barge in to humber, but alwayes quene gweneyer prayed syr kay for his dedes, and sayd what lady that ye loue, and she loue yow not aseyne she were gretely to blame, and amonge ladyes said the Quene I shalle bere youre noble name, for ye spak a grete word and fulfyllde it worshipfully and therwith the quene departed. Themne the kyng and the thre knyghtes rode in to the forest, for there they supposed to here of them that were escaped, and there he sond the most party of his peple, and told hem all how the fyue kynges were dede, and therfor lete vs hold vs to gyders tyl it be day, and whan their hoost hau e aspyed that their chyuestayns be slayn they wille make suche dole that they shal not mowe helpe himselfe, and ryght so as the kyng said, so it was, for when they sondde the fyue kynges dede, they made suche dole that they fell fro their horses. Ther with all cam kyng Arthur but with a fewe peple and slewe on the lyfte hand and on the ryght hand that wel nyhe ther escaped no man, but alle were slayne to the nombre of xxx M. And whan the bataille was all ended the kyng kneled doune and thanked god mekely, and theme he sente for the quene and soone she was come, and she maade grete Joyce of the ouercomyng of that bataille.

There with alle came one to kyngz Arthur, and told hym that kyng Pellinore was within thre myle with a grete hoost, and he said, go vnto hym and lete hym vnderstande how we haue spedde. Soo within a whyle kyng Pellinore cam with a grete hoost, and salewed the peple and the kyng, and ther was grete ioye made on euery syde. Thenne the kyng leta serche how moche people of his party ther was slayne. And ther were founde but lytel past two hondred men slayne and viii knyastes of the table round in their pauelions. Thenne the kyng leta rere and deuyse in the same place there as the bataile was done a faire abbeye and endowed it wyth grete lyuelode and leta it calle the Abbey of la beale aduenture, but whanne somme of them cam in to their Countryes therof the fyue kynges were kynges and told hem how they were slayne, ther was made grete dole. And alle kynges Arthurs enemyes, as the kynges of Northwaies and the kynges of the North wyse of the bataile they were passynge heuy, and soo the kyng reterned vnto Camelot in hast. And whan he was come to Camelot, he called kyng Pellinore vnto hym sayd, ye vnderstand wel that we haue loste viii knyghetes of the best of the table round, and by your aduys we will cheve viii ageyne of the best we may fynde in this Courte. Syr said Pellinore, I shal councell yeow after my conceyte the best, there are in your Courte ful noble knyghetes bothe of old & yonge. And therfor by myn aduys ye shal cheve half of the old and half of the yonge, whiche be the old sad kyng Arthur. Syre said kyng Pellinore me semeth that kyng Uryence that hath wedded your syster Morgan le fay and the kyng of the lake and syr Heruyse de reuel a noble knyght, and syr galagars the iii. this is wel deuyse said kyng Arthur and right soo shal it be. Now whiche are the four yong knyghetes said Arthur. Syre said Pellinore the fyrest is syr Gawayne your neeuwe that is as good a knyght of his tyme, as ony is, in this lad, And the second as me semeth best is syre Gryflet le fyse the dene that is a good knyght and ful desyrus in armes, and who may see hym lyue he shal preue a good knyghte. And the thyrd as me semeth is wel to be one of the knyghtes of the round table syr kay the seneschal for many tymes he hath done ful worshipfully. And now at your last bataile he dyd full honourably for to vndertake to slee two kyngeses. By my heede said Arthur he is best worthy to be a knyght of the round table of ony that ye haue reherced, and he had done no more prowesse in his lyf dayes.
Capitulum Quintum.

Now said kyng Pellenore I shalle putte to yow two knyghtes, and ye shalle chese whiche is most worthy, that is Syr Bagdemagus and syr Tor my sone. But by cause Syre Tor is my sone I may not prayse hym, but els and he were not my sone, I durst saye that of his age ther is not in this land a better knyghte then he is nor of better condycions and lothe to doo ony wronge, and loth to take ony wronge. By my hede said Arthur he is a passyng good knyght, as ony ye spak of this day, that wote I wel saide the kyng, for I haue sene hym preued but he seyth lytyll and he doth moche more, for I knowe none in al this courte & he were as wel borne on his moder syde as he is on your syde that is lyke hym of prowess and of myghte. And therfore I wille haue hym at this tyne and leue syr Bagdemagus tyll another tyne. Soo when they were so chosen by the assente of alle the barons, Soo were there founden in her sypeges every knyghtes names that here are reherced, and so were they set in their sypeges, wherof syr Bagdemagus was wondery wrothe that syr Tor was aannounced afore hym, and therfore sodenly he departed from the Courte and toke his squyer with hym, & rode longe in a forest tyll they came to a crossesse and there alyst and sayd his prayers deuoutely. The meanes whyle his squyer founde wryten vpon the crossesse that Bagdemagus shold neuer retorne vnto the Courte aegyne, tyll he had wonne a knyghtes body of the round table body for body. Io syr said his squyer, here I fynde wrytyn of yow, therfor I rede yow retorne aegyne to the Courte, that shalle I neuer said Bagdemagus tyll men speke of me grete worship, and that I be worthy to be a knyghte of the round table, and soo he rode forthe. And ther by the way he founde a brauche of an holy herbe that was the sygne of the Sancgrail, and no knyghte founde suche tokens but he were a good lyuer. So as sir Bagdemagus rode to see many adventuresses, it happed hym to come to the roche, ther as the lady of the lake had put Merlyn vnder the stone, and there he herde hym make grete dole, wherof syre Bagdemagus wold have holpen hym and wente vnto the grete stone, and he was so heuy that an C men myght not lyfte hyt up. Whan Merlyn wyste he was here he bad leue his labour, for al was in vayne, for he myght neuer be holpen but by her that put hym ther, and so Bagdemagus departed and dyd many auentures and preued after a full good knyght, and came aseyne to the Courte and was made knyght of the round table. So on the morne ther felle newe tydynges and other auentures.

Capitulm Sextum.

Thenne it befelle that Arthur and many of his knyghtes rode on huntynge in to a grete forest, and it happed kyng Arthur, kyng Uryens and syr Accolon of gaulle folowed a grete herte for they thre were wel horsed, and soo they chaced so fast that within a whyle they thre were thenne x myle from her felauiship. And at the last they chaced so sore that they slewe theyr horses vndernethe them. Thenne were they al thre on foute, and euer they sawe the herte afore them passyng wery and enbusched. What wille we doo said kyng arthur we are hard bestad, lete vs goo on foute said kyng Uryens tyll we may mete with some lodgyng. Thenne were they ware of the herte that lay on a grete water banke, and a brachet bytynge on his throte and mo other houndes cam after. Thenne kyng Arthur blew the pryse and dyghte the herte. Thenne the kyng loked aboute the world, and sawe afore hym in a grete water a lytel ship al apparrilled with slyke doune to the water, and the shyp cam ryghte vnto hem and laded on the sandes. Thenne Arthur wente to the banke & loked in, and sawe none ertility creature therin. Sirs said the kyng come thens, and lete vs see what is in this ship. Soo they wente in al thre and founde hit rychely behanged with clothe of sylie. By thenne it was derke nyghte, and there sodenly were aboute them an C torches sette vpon alle the sydes of the shyp bordes and it gaf grete lyghte. And ther with all there cam out twelue fayr damoysels and salew kyng Arthur on her knees and called hym by his name, and sayd he was ryght welcome, and suche chere as they had he shold haue of the best, the kyng thanked hem fayre. There with all they laid the kyng and his two felawes in to a fair chambre, and ther was a clothe leyd rychely bysene of al that longed vnto a tabel, and there were they serued of al wynes and metes that they coude thynke, of that the kyng had grete merueille, for he ferd neuer better in his lyf as for one souer. And so when they had souped at her leyser, kyng Arthur was ledde vnto a chamber, a rycher besene chamber sawe he neuer none, and soo was kyng Uryens serued, and ledde in to suche another châbyr, and syr Accolon was ledde in to the thyrd chamber passyng rychely and wel bysene, and so were they layde in theire beddes easily. And anone they felle on slepe, and slepte merueillously sore al the nyght. And on the morowe kyngge Uryens was in Camelott abed in his wyues armes Morgan le fay. And whan he awoke, he had grete merueille, how he cam there, for on the even afore he was two dayes Journey frô Camelot. And whan kyng Arthur awoke he found hym self in a derke pryson herynge aboute hym many complayntes of woful knyghtes.

Capitulum Septimum.

What are ye that soo complayne said kyng Arthur. We ben here xx knyghtes prysoners sayd they, & some of ys haue layne here seuen yere and somme more and somme lasse, for what cause sayd Arthur. We shalle telle yow said the knyghtes, this lord of this castel his name is syr Damas, & he is the falsest knyght that lyueth, and ful of treasan, and a very coward as ony lyueth, and he hath a yonger broder a good knyghte of prowesse, his name is syr Onztlake, and this traytoure Damas the elder broder wylle gyue hym noo partes of his lyuelode. But as syre Onztlake kepeth thorow prowesse of his handes, and so he kepeth from hym a ful fair maner and a rychy and therin syre Onztlake dwellet worshipfully, and is wel biloued of al peple, & this syre Damas our maister is as euyl mercly for he is without mercy, and he is a coward, and grete werre hath ben betwyxe them bothe, but Onztlake hath euuer the better, and euuer he profereth syre Damas to fyghte for the lyuelode body for body, but he wylle not doo, other els to fynde a knyghte to fyghte for hym. Unto that syr Damas hath graunted to fynde a knyghte, but he is so euyll bly-loued and hate, that there is neuer a knyghte wylle fyghte for hym.
And whan Damas sawe this that ther was neuer a knyght, wold fyghte for hym, he hath daily Layn a wayte with many knyghtes with hym, and taken alle the knyghtes in this countre to see and aspye her aventures, he hath taken hem by force and broughte hem to his pryson, and so he tooke vs seueratly as we rode on oure aventure, 8 many good knyghtes haue dyed in this pryson for hongre to the nombre of xviii knyghtes. And ye ony of us alle that here is or hath ben wold haue foughten with his broder Ontlake, he wold haue delyuerd vs, but for by cause this Damas is so fals and so ful of treason we wold neuer fyghte for hym to dye for it. And we be soo lene for hongre that vnmethe we may stannde on oure feete. god de-lyuer yow for his mercy sayd Arthur. Anone there with alle ther cam a damoysele vnto Arthur, and asked hym what chere. I can not say sayd he, sir sayd she and ye wylle fyghte for my lord ye shall be delyuerd oute of pryson, and els ye escape neuer the lyf.
Now sayd Arthur that is hard, yet had I leuer to fyghte with a knyght than to dye in pryson, with this sayd Arthur I may be delyuerd and alle these prysoner I wyll do the batall, yes said the damoysele. I am redy sayd Arthur and I had hors and armoure, ye shall lacke none said the damoysele. Me semeth damoysele I shold haue sene yow in the Courte of Arthur. Nay said the damoysele I cam neuer there, I am the lorde daughter of this castel, yet was she fals for she was one of the damoyseles of Morgan le Fay. Anone she wepte vnto syr Damas and told hym how he wold doo bataille for hym, and so he sente for Arthur. And whan he cam he was wel coloured and wel made of his lymmes, that al knyghtes that sawe hym said it were pyte that suche a knyghte shold dye in pryson, soo syr Damas and he were agreed that he shold fyghte for hym vpon this couenaat that all other knyghtes shold be delyuerd. And vnto that was syr Damas sworne vnto Arthur, and also to doo the bataille to the vittermest. And with that all the xx knyghtes were brought outhe of the derke pryson in to the halle and delyuerd, and so they all abode to see the bataille.
Capitulum Octauum.

Now torne we vnto Accolon of Gaulle that whanne he awoke, he found hym self by a depe welle syde within half a foote in grete peryll of dethe. And there cam oute of that fontayne a pyple of syluer, and oute of that pyple ranne water all on hyhe in a stone of marbel. Whan Syre Accolon sawe this, he blesseyd hym and sayd: Jhesu saue my lorde kyng Arthur and kyng Uryens, for these damoysels in this ship haue bitrayed vs, they were deuyls and non wymmen. And yf I may escape this misauntert, I shal the destroye all where I may fynde these fals damoysels that vse enchante-mentys.

Ryght with that ther cam a dwarf with a grete mouthe & a flat nose and salewed syre Accolon and said how he came from Quene Morgan le fay, and she gretteth yow wel, and byddeth yow be of strong herte, for ye shal fyzte to morne with a knyghtes at the houre of pryme. And therfore she hath sente yow here Excalibur Arthurs swerd and the scaubard, and she byddeth yow as ye loue her that ye doo the batail to the vttermost without ony mercy lyke as ye had promysed her wha ye spake to gyder in pryute. And what damoysel that bryngheth her the knyghtes hede whiche ye shal fyghte with al, she wille make her a quene. Now I understond yow wel sayd Accolon. I shal the holde that I haue promysed her now I haue the swerd, whan sawe ye my lady Quene Morgan le fay. Ryghte late sayd the dwarf: thenne Accolon tooke hym in his armes, and said recommaunde me vnto my lady Quene, and telle her all shal be done that I haue promysed her, and els I wille dye for hit. Now I suppose said Accolon she hath made alle these craftes and enchaunte-ment for this bataille, ye may wel bileue it said the dwarf. Ryzt so there cam a knyghte and a lady with syxe squyers, and salewed Accolon, and prayd hym for to aysye and come and reste hym at his maner, and so Accolon mounted vpon a voyde hors, & wente with the knyghte vnto a fayre maner by a pryory, and there he had passyng good chere. Thenne sir Damas sente vnto his broder syr Ontzelake, and badde make hym redy by to morne at the houre of pryme, and to be in the felde to fyghte wyth a good knyght, for he had founden a good knyght that was redy to doo bataill at all poynete.
When this word cam vnto sir Ontzelake, he was passyng heuy, for he was wounded a lytel to fore thorow bothe his thyes with a spere, and made grete dole. But as he was wounded he wold haue taken the bataille on hand. Soo it happe at that tyme by the meanes of Morgan le fay Accolon was with syr Ontzelake lodged, and whan he herd of that bataille and how Ontzelake was wouede, he sayd that he wold fyghte for hym by cause Morgan le fay had sente hym Excalibur and the shethe for to fyzte with the knyght on the morne.
This was the cause syr Accolon toke the bataille on hand, themne syre Ontzelake was passyng glad, and thanked syr Accolon with alle his herde that he wold do so moche for hym, & ther with al syr Ontzelake sente word vnto his broder syre Damas, that he had a knyzte y' for hym shold be redy in the felde by the houre of pryme.
Soo on the morne syr Arthur was armed and wel horsed, and asked syr Damas whan shalle we to the felde, syr said syr Damas ye shalle here masse, and syr Arthur herd a masse. And whan masse was done, there cam a squyer on a grete hors & asked syr Damas yf his knyght were redy, for oure knyght is redy in the felde. Thenne syre Arthur mounted vpon horsbak, & there were alle the knyghtes and comyns of that country, & so by alle aduyyses ther were choosen xii good men of the countrey for to wayte vpon the two knyghtes. And ryght as Arthur was on horsbak, ther cam a damoisel from Morgan le fay and broughte vnto syr Arthur a swerd lyke vnto Excalibur, and the scouard, and sayd vnto Arthur Morgan le fay sendeth here your swerd for grete loue, and he thanked her, & wende it had ben so, but she was fals, for the swerd and the scouard was counterfeet & brutyll and fals.

Capitulum ix.

And themne they dressyd hem on bothe partyes of the felde, & leth their horses renne so fast that eyther smote other in the myddes of the shelde, with their spere hede, that bothe hors and man wente to the erthe. And thenn they stert vp bothe, and pulled oute their swerdys, the meane whyle that they were thus at the bataille sam the damoyel of the lake in to the felde, that put Merlyn vnder the stone, & she sam thydder for loute of kyngge Arthur, for she knewe how Morgan le fay had soo oderneyd, that kyngge Arthur shold hauze ben slayne that daye, and therfor she sam to saue his lyf. And so they went edgeley to the bataille, and gaf many grete strokes, but alweyes Arthurs swerd bote not lyke Accolon swerd. But for the most party eueri stroke that Accolon gaf he wounded sore Arthur, that it was merueylle he stode. And alweyes his blood fylle from hym fast. Whan Arthur beheld the ground so sore bebledde he was desmayed, and thenne he demed treason that his swerd was chaunged, for his swerd boote not styl as it was wonte to do, therfor he drede hym sore to be dede, for euer hym semed that the swerd in Accolons hand was Excalibur, for at euer stroke that Accolon stroke he drew blood on Arthur. Now knyghte saide Accolon vnto Arthur kepe the wel from me, but Arthur ansuerd not aseyne, and gaf hym suche a buffet on the helme that he made hym to stoupe nygh fallinge doune to the erthe. Thenn syr Accolon withdrew hym a lytel, and cam on with Excalibur on hyghe, and smote syr Arthur suche a buffet that he felle nyhe to the erthe. Thennere were they wroth bothe, and gaf eche other many sore strokes, but alweyes syr Arthur lost so moche blood that it was merueille he stode on his feet, but he was soo ful of knygthbode that knyghtly he endurde the payne. And syr Accolon lost not a dele of blood, therfor he waxt passynge lyghte, and syr Arthur was passynge febl, and wende veryly to haue dyed, but for al that he made countenance as though he myghte endure, and helde Accolon as shorte as he myght. But Accolon was so bolde by cause of Excalibur that he waxed passynge hardy. But alle men that beheld hym sayd they sawe neuer knyghte fyghte so wel as Arthur dyd consyderyng the blood that he bled. Soo was all the peple sory for hym, but the two brethern wold not accorde, thenn alweyes they fought to gyders as fyers knyghtes, and syrre Arthur withdrew hym a lytel for to reste hym, and syrre Accolon calde hym to bataille and said it is no tyme for me to suffre the to reste. And therwith he cam fyerely vpon Arthur, and syre Arthur was wrothe for the blood that he had lost, and smote Accolon on hybe vpon the helme soo mystely that he made hym nyhe to falle to the erthe. And therwith Arthurs sword brast at the crosse and felle in the grasse amonke the blood and the pomel and the sure handels he helde in his handes. When syr arthur sawe that, he was in grete fere to dye, but alwayes he helde vp his sheld and lost no ground nor bated no chere.

THENNE syre Accolon beganne with wordes of treason, and sayd knyghte thow arte ouercome, and mayste not endure and also thow arte wepenles, and thow hast loste moche of thy blood, and I am ful lothe to see the, therfor yelde the to me as recreant. Nay saide syre Arthur I maye not so, for I haue promysed to doo the bataille to the viternest by the feythe of my body whyle me lasteth the lyf, and therfor I had leuer to dye with honoure than to lyue with shame. And yf it were possyble for me to dye an C tymes I had leuer to dye so ofte, than yelde me to the, for though I lacke wepen, I shalle lacke no worship. And yf thow selle me wepenles that shalle be thy shame. Wel sayd Accolon as for the shame I wyl not spare. Now kepe the from me for thow arte but a dede ma. And therwith Accolon gaf hym suche a stroke that he felle nythe to the erthe, and wolde haue had Arthur to haue cryed hym mercy. But syre Arthur pressed vnto Accolon with his sheld, and gaf hym with the pomel in his hand suche a buffet that he went thre strydes abak. Whan the damoisele of the lake beheld arthur, how ful of prowess his body was & the fals treson that was wrouzt for hym to haue had hym alayn she had grete pyte that so good a knyzt & suche a mä of worship shold so be destroyed. And at the next stroke syr Accolon stroke hym suche a stroke that by the damoysels enhaulement the sword Excalibur felle oute of Accolons hande to the erthe. And therwith alle Syr Arthur lyghtely lepte to hit, and gate hit in his hand, and forthwith al he knewe that it was his sword Excalibur, & sayd thow hast ben from me al to long, & moche dommage hast thow done me, & ther with he aspyed the scaubard hangynge by his syde, and sodenly he sterre to hym and pulled the scaubard from hym and threwe hit fro hym as fer as he myghte throwe hit. O knyghte saide Arthur this daye hast thow done me grete dommage with this swerd. Now are ye come vnto your dethe, for I shalle not wraunt yow but ye shalle as wel be rewarded with this swerde or euer we departe as thow hast rewarded me, for moche payne haue ye made me to endure, and moche blood haue I lost. And therwith syr Arthur rashed on hym with alle his myghte and pulled hym to the erthe, and theñe rashed of his helme, and gaf hym suche a buffet on the heede that the blood cam outhe at his eres, his nose & his mouthe. Now wylle I sée the said Arthur. Sée me ye may wel said Accolon and it please yow, for ye ar the best knyghte that euer I fonde, and I see wel that god is with yow. But for I promysed to doo this batail said Accolon to the vtermost and neuer to be recreas ythyle I lyued, therfore shal I neuer yelde me with my mouthe, but god doo with my body what he wyll. Themne syr Arthur remembred hym and thoughte he shold haue sene this knyghte. Now telle me said Arthur or I wylle sée the, of what coultre art thou and of what courte. Syre knyghte sayd syr Accolon I am of the courte of kynge Arthur, & my name is Accolon of gaulle. Themne was Arthur more desmayed than he was before hand. For themne he remembryd hym of his suyster Morgan le fay, and of the enchanuement of the ship. O syre knyghte sayd he, I pray yow telle me who gaf yow this swerd and by whom ye had it.

Thenne syre Accolon bethouzte hym and said wo worth this swerd, for by hit haue I geten my dethe, it may wel be, said the kynge. Now syre said Accolon I wil telle yow this swerd hath ben in my kepynghe the most party of this twelue moneth. And Morgan le fay kynghe Uryene wyf sente it me yester daye by a dowre to this entente that I shold sée kynghe Arthur her broder. For ye shall vnderstand kynghe Arthur is the man in the world that she moost hateth by cause he is moost of worship and of prowesse of ony of her blood. Also she loueth me oute of mesure as paramour, and I her ageyne. And yf she myghte brynte aboute to sene Arthur by her craftes, she wold sene her husband kynge Uryens lyghtely. And thenne hadde she me deuyed to be kyng in this land, and soo to regne, and she to be my quene, but that is now done saide Accolon, for I am sure of my dethe. Wel sayd syre Arthur, I fele by yow ye wold haue ben kynge in this land. It had ben grete dommage to haue destroyed your lord sayd Arthur, it is trouth sayd Accolon, but now I haue told yow trouthe, wherfore I praye yow telle me of whens ye are and of what courte. O Accolon sayd kynge Arthur now I lete the wete, that I am kynge Arthur to whome thow haste done grete dommage. Whanne Accolon herd that, he cryed on lowde, fayre swete lord haue mercy on me, for I knewe not yow. O syr Accolon sayd kynge Arthur mercy shalt thow haue, by cause I fele by thy wordes that thou hast agreed to the dethe of my persone, and therfore thou art a traytour, but I wyte the the lasse, for my syster Morgan le fay by her fals craftes made the to agree and consent to her fals lustes, but I shalle be sore auenged vpon her and I lyue that alle Crystendome shalle speke of it, god knoweth, I haue honoured her and worshipped her more than alle my kynne, and more haue I trusted her than myn owne wyf and alle my kynne after.

Thenne syr Arthur called the kepars of the felde and said Syrs cometh hyder, for here are we two knyghtes that haue foughten vnto a grete dommage vnto vs both, and lyke echone of vs to haue slayne other, yf it had happe soo. And hadde ony of vs knowne other, here had ben no bataille, nor stroke striken. Thenne al a lowde cryed Accolon vnto alle the knyghtes and men that were theu there gadred to gyder, and sayd to them in this manere, O lordes this noble knyghte that I haue foughten with all, the whiche me sore re-penteth is the mooste man of prowesse of manhode and of worship in the world, for it is hym self kynge Arthur our alther liege lord, & with myshap and with mysaueture haue I done this bataill with the kyng and lord that I am holden with all.

Capitulum xii.

THENNE alle the peple felle doune on her knees and cryed kynge Arthur mercy, mercy shalle ye haue sayd Arthur, here maye ye see what auentures befallen of tyme of erraunte knyghtes how that I haue foughten with a knyght of myn owne vnto my grete dommage and his bothe.

But syrs by cause I am sore hurte and he bothe, and I had grete nede of a lytel rest, ye shalle vnderstande the oppynyon betwixe yow two bretheren as to the syre Damas, for whom I haue ben cham-pyon and wonne the feld of this knyghte, yet wylle I juge by cause ye syre Damas are called an orgulous knyghte and full of vlyony and not worthe of prowesse of youre dedes, therfor I wylle that ye gyue vnto your broder alle the hole manoir with the appertenaunce vnder thys forme, that sir Ontzelake hold the manoir of yow, and yerely to gyue yow a palfrey to ryde vpon, for that wylle become yow better to ryde on than vpon a courser. Also I charge the syre Damas vpon payne of deth, that thow neuer destresse no knyhtes erraunte that ryde on their aduenture. And also that thow restore these xx knyghtes that thow hast longe kepte prysoners of all their harneis that they be content for, and yf ony of hem come to my court and complayne of the, by my hede thou shalt dye theryfore. Also syre Ontzelake as to yow by cause ye are named a good knyghte and ful of prowesse and true and gentyl in all youre dedes this shalle be youre charge. I wylle gyue yow that in al goodely haste ye come vnto me and my courte and ye shalle be a knyghte of myne, and yf your dedes be there after I shall so proferre yow by the grace of god that ye shalle in shorte tyme be in ease for to lyue as worshipfully as your broder syre Damas. God thanke your largenesse of your goodenes & of your bounte. I shall be from hens forward at all tymes at your comandement. For syr said syr Ontzelake as god wold as I was hurte but late with an adventures knyght thurgh both my thyres that greued me sore, & els had I done this bataille with yow, god wold sayd Arthur it had ben so, for thenne had not I ben hurte as I am. I shalle telle yow the cause why, for I had not ben hurte as I am hadde not ben myne owne swerd, that was stolen from me by treason. And this bataille was ordeyned afore hand to haue slayne me, and so it was brouzte to the purpose by fals treason and by fals enchantement. Alas said syr Ontzelake that is greete pyt that euer soo noble a man as ye are of your dedes and prowesse, that ony man or woman myyst fynde in their hertes to worke ony treason agaynst yow. I shalle reward them said Arthur in short tyme by the grace of god. Now telle me said Arthur how fer am I from Camelot, syr ye are two dayes iourney ther fro. I wold fayn be at some place of worship said syr Arthur that I myghte reste me. Syre said syr Ontzelake, here by is a ryche abbey of your elders foudacyon of Nonnes but thre myle hens. So the kynge took his leue of alle the peple, and mounted vpon horsbak, and sir Acolon with hym. And when they were come to the Abbaye, he lete fetche leches and serche his wounds and Acolons bothe, but syr Acolon dyed within four dayes, for he had bled soo moche blood that he myghte not liue, but kynge Arthur was wel recouerd. Soo whan Acolon was dede, he lete sende hym on an horisere with syx knyghtes vnto Camelot, and said, bere hym to my syster Morgan le fay, and say that I sende her hym to a presente, and telle her I haue my swerd Excalibur and the scabard, soo they departed with the body.

Capitulum xiii.

The meane whyle Morgan le fay hadde wend kynge Arthur had ben dede, soo on a day she aspyed kynge Uryens lay in his bedde slepynge, thenne she called vnto her a mayden of her counseyl, & said go fetche me my lorde swerd for I sawe neuer better tyme to sse hym than now.

O Madame sayd the damoysele, and ye sse my lord ye can neuer escape. Care not yow said Morgan le fay, for now I see my tyme in the whiche it is best to doo hit, And therfor hye the fast and fetche me the swerd. The see the damosel departed & sende syre Uwayne slepynge vpon a bedde in another chamber soo she wente vnto sire Uwayne and awaked hym, and badde hym aryse and wayte on my lady youre moder, for she wille slee the kyng e your fader slepynge in his bedde, for I goo to fetch his swerd. Wel said syr Uwayne go on your waye, and lete me dele. Anone the damoyssel brought Morgan the swerd with quakyng handes, and lyghtely took the swerd, & pulled it out, and wente boldely vnto the beddes syde, and awayted how and where she myght sle hym best. And as she lyfte vp the swerd to smyte, syr Uwayne lepte vnto his moder and caughte her by the hand and sayd, A fende what wilt thow do. And thow were not my moder with this swerd I shold smyte of thy hede. A sayd syr Uwayn men saith that Merlyn was begoten of a deyylle, but I may saye an erithely deyylle bare me. O fayre sone Uwayne haue mercy vpon me. I was tempted with a deyylle, wherfore I crie the mercy. I wylle neuer more doo soo and saue my worship and discover me not. On this couenaunt said syr Uwayne I wille forgyue it yow, soo ye wille neuer be aboute to doo suche dedes. Nay sone said she, & that I make yow assurance.

Capitulum xiii.

Thenne came tydynges vnto Morgan le fay that Accolon was dede, and his body brought vnto the chirche, and how kyng e Arthur had his swerd ageyne. But whanne Quene Morgan wyste that Accolon was dede, she was soo sorowful that nere hir herte to brast. But by cause she wold not it were knowen, oute ward she kepe her countenaunce, & made no semblant of sorowe. But wel she wyste and she abode tyll her broder Arthur cam thyder, there shold no gold goo for her lyf.

Thenne she wente vnto Quene Gweneuer, and asked her neue to ryde in to the countreye, ye maye abyde sayde Quene Gweneuer tyll youre brother the kyng e come home. I maye not sayde Morgan le fay, for I haue suche hasty tydynges, that I maye not tary. Wel saide Gweneuer ye maye deparde whanne ye wille. Soo erly on the morne or hit was daye she tooke her hors and rode alle that daye and mooste parte of the nyghte. And on the morn by none she cam to the same Abbey of Nommes, where as lay kyng e arthur, & she knowyng he was there she asked where he was. And they ansuered how he had leyd hym in his bed to slepe, for he had had but lytel reste these thre nyghtes. Wel said she I charge yow that none of yow awake hym tyl I doo, and thenne she alyghte of her hors, & thoughte for to stele awey Excalibur his swerd, and soo she wente streyghte vnto his chamber. And noo man durste dysoybe ye her commandement, and there she fond Arthur a slepe in his bedde and Excalibur in his ryght hand naked. Whan she sawe that she was passynghe heuy that she myghte not come by the swerd withoute she had awaked hym, and thenne she wyst wel she had ben dede. Thenne she tooke the scabard and wente her wy on horsbak. Whan the kynge awoke and myssed his scabard, he was wrothe, and he asked who had ben there, and they said his syster quene Morgan had ben ther, and had put the scabard vnder her mantel and was gone. Allas sayd Arthur falsly ye haue watchte me. Syre sayd they alle we durste not disoysbe your systers commandement. A said the kynge lette fetche the best hors maye be founde, and byd syre Ontzlake arne hym in al hast, and take another good hors and ryde with me. Soo anone the kynge and Ontzlake were wel armed, and rode after this lady, and soo they cam by a crosse and found a Cowherd, and they asked the poure man ye ther cam ony lady late rydyng that way. Syre sayd this poure man, ryght late cam a lady rydyng with a xl horses, and to yonder forest she rode. Thenne they spored their horses, and folowed fast. And within a whyle Arthur had a syghte of Morgan le fay, thynne he chaced as fast as he myghte. Whanne she aspyed hym folowynghe her, she rode a gretter pas thorwe the forest tyl she cam to a playne. And whanne she sawe she myghte not escape, she rode vnto a lake ther by, & sayd what soo euer come of me, my broder shall not haue this scabard. And thenne she lete throwe the scabard in the depest of the water soo it sanke, for it was hevy of gold and precious stones. Thenne she rode in to a valeye where many grete stones were. And whan she sawe she muste be ouertake she shope her self hors and man by enchaumente vnto a grete marbyl stone. Anone with al cam Syr Arthur, and syr Ontzlake whare as the kynge myght knowe his syster and her men, and one knyght from another. A sayd the kynge here may ye see the vengesunce of god, and now am I sory that this mysauenture is befallie, & thene he loked for the scaubard, but it wold not be founde, so he returned to the Abbeye there he came fro. So when Arthur was gone, she turned alle in to the lykenesse as she and they were before, and sayd syr now may we goo where we wylle.

Thenne said Morgan sawe ye Arthur my broder, ye said her knyghtes ryght wel, and that ye shold haue founde and we myghte haue stered from one stede, for by his armyuestal contenaeunce he wold haue caused vs to haue fled. I byleue yow said Morgan. Anone after as she rode she met a knyght ledyng another knyzt on his hors before hym bounde hand and foote blyndefeld to haue drowned hym in a fontayne, when she sawe this knyzt so boide, she asked hym what wylle ye doo with that knyght, lady said he I wylle drowne hym, for what cause she asked, for I fonde hym with my wyf, and she shalle haue the same deethe anone, that were pyte sayd Morgan le say. Now what saye ye knyzt is it trouthe ye he asith of yow she said to the knyght that shold be drowned, say truly madame he seith not ryght on me. Of whens be ye sayd Morgan le say and of what countre. I am of the Courte of kynge Arthur, and my name is Manassen cosyn vnto Accolon of gauille, ye say wel said she, and for the loue of hym ye shalle be deluyerd, and ye shalle haue your aduerary in the same casse ye be in. So Manassen was losed & the other knyght bounde. And anone Manassen vnarmed hym and armed hym selfe in his harneis, and soo mounted on horsbak, and the knyght afofe hym and soo threwe hym in to the fontayne and drownede hym. And thenne he rode vnto Morgan ageyne, & asked yf she wold ony thyng vnto kynge Arthur. Telle hym that I rescued the, not for the loue of hym but for the loue of Accolon, and telle hym I sere hym not whyle I can make me and them that ben with me in lykernes of stones. And lete hym wete I can doe moche more whan I see my tyme. And so she departed in to the countrey of Gorre, and there was she rychely receyued, and maade her castels and townes passyng stronge, for alwayes she drad moche kyngge Arthur.
Whanne the kyngge had wel rested hym at the Abbey he rode vnto Camelot, and fonde his quene and his barons ryght glad of his comynge. And whanne they herd of his straunge aventure as is afole reherced, they alle hadde mercuille of the falshehege of Morgan le fay, many knyghtes wysahed her brent, thenne cam Manessen to courte and told the kyng of his aventure, Well said the kyngge she is a kynde syster. I shalle soo be auengid on her and I lyue, that alle Crystendome shalle speke of hit. So on the morne ther came a damoysel from Morgan to the kyngge and she brought with her the rychest mantel that euere was sene in that Courte, for it was sette as ful of precious stones as one myght stand by another, and there were the rychest stones that euere the kyngge sawe. And the damoysel saide youre syster sendeth yow this mantel, and desyreth that ye shold take this gyfte of her. And in what thyng she hath offended you she wille amende it at youre owne pleasyr. Whanne the kyng beheld this mantel it pleasysd hym moche, but he said but lytel.

Capitulum xvi.

Wyth that came the damoysel of the lake vnto the kyng and said syr I must speke with yow in pryuyte, say on said the kyngge what ye wille. Syr sayd the damoysel put not on yow this mantel tyl ye haue sene more, and in no wyse lete it not come on yow nor on no knyghte of yours tyl ye commande the brynger therof to put it vpon her, wel said kyngge Arthur, It shalle be done as ye councelle me. And thenne he said vnto the damoysel that cam fro his sister, damoysel this mantel that ye haue brought me I wille see it vpon yow, syr she said, it wille not bisme me to were a kyngges garment, by my hede said Arthur, ye shalle were it or it come on my bak or ony mans that here is, and so the kyng made it to be putt vpon her.
And forth with al she felle doune dede, and neuer more speke word after and brenste to coles. Thenne was the kyng wonderly wrothe more than he was to fore hand, and sayd vnto kyng Uryens my syster your wyf is alwey aboute to bytraye me, and wel I wote outher ye or my newe wyf youre sone is of counceille with her to haue me destroyed. But as for yow said the kyng to kyng Uryens I deme not gretely that ye be of her counceill. For Accolon confesseyd to me by his owne mouth that she wold haue destroyed yow as wel as me therfor I hold yow excused. But as for your sone Syr Uwayn I hold hym suspect, therefore I charge yow put hym oute of my courte. So syr Uwayne was discharged. And whanne Syr Gawayne wytst that he made hym redly to go with hym, & said who so banyssabeth my coseyn germayn, shal bannysshe me. Soo they two departed, and rode in to a grete forest, and soo they came to an Abbay of Monkes, and ther were wel lodged. But whanne the kyng wytst that syr Gawayne was departed from the Courte, ther was made grete sorowe amonget alle the estates. Now sayd Gaheris Gawayns broder we haue lost two good knyghtes for the loute of one. So on the morne they herd their masses in the abbay, and so they rode forth tyl that they came to a grete forest, thenne was syr Gawayne ware in a valey by a turret xii fayre damoysels, and two knyghtes armyn on grete horses, and the damoysels wente to and fro by a tree. And thenne was syr Gawayne ware how there henge a whyte shelde on that tree. And euer as the damoysels cam by it, they spytte upon it, and some threwe myre upon the shelde.

Thenne syr Gawayne and syr Uwayne wente and salewed them, and asked why they dyd that despyte to the shelde. Syrs saiden the damoysels, we shalle telle yow. There is a knyght in this coutrey that oweth this whyte shelde and he is a passyng good man of his handes, but he hateth al ladys and gentylwymmen, and therfor we doo alle this despyte to the shelde. I shal say yow said syr gawayne, hit bysemeth euyle a good knyghte to despye all ladys and gentylwymmen. And perauntur though he hate yow he hath
...somme (certayne cause*). And parauenture he loueth in somme other places ladyes and gentlywymmen, and to be loued aseyne, and he be suche a mæ of prowess as ye speke of. Now what is his name, syr sayd they, his name is Marhaus the kynges sone of Ireland. I knowe hym wel sayd syre Uwayne, he is a passyng good kynght as ony is on lyue, for I sawe hym ones preued at a Justes where many kynghtes were gadered, and that tyme ther myghte no man withstande hym. A sayd syr Gawayne, Damoysels me thynketh ye are to blame, for hit is to suppose, he that henge that sheld ther, he wille not be longe ther fro, & thenne may tho kynghtes machte hym on horsbak, and that is more your worship than thus. For I wille abyde no lenger to see a kynghtes sheld diahonoured. And therwith syre Uwayne and Gawayne departed a lytel fro them. And thenne were they ware where syre Marhaus cam rydyng on a grete hors streyghte toward them. And whanne the xii damoysels sawe syr Marhaus they fled in to the turrent as they were wylde so that somme of them felle by the wey. Thenne the one of the kynghtes of the Toure dressid his sheldre and said on hyghe syr Marhaus defende the, and soo they ranne to gyders that the knyght brake his spere on Marhaus, & Marhaus smote hym so hard that he brake his neck and the hors bak. That sawe the other knyght of the turrent and dressyd hym toward Marhaus, and they mette so egregly to gyders that the knyght of the Turrent was soonen amyten doune hors and man stark dede.

And thenne syre Marhaus rode vnto his shelde, and sawe how it was defowled, and sayd of this despyte I am a parte anenged. But for her loue that gaf me this whyte shedde I shalle were the, and hange myne where thow was and soo he hanged it aboute his neck. Thenne he rode streyght vnto syr Gawayne and to syr Uwayne, and asked them what they dyd there. They ansuerd hym that they cam from kyng Arthurs courte for to see aventures. Wel sayd syre Mar-

* These two words set in the original, but are in the second edition, and are necessary to render the passage intelligible. haus here am I redy an aventure knyghte that wille fulfylle ony adventure that ye wylle desyre. And soo departed fro them, to fetche his raunge, let hym goo seid syr Uwayne vnto syre Gawayne, for he is a passynge good knyghte as ony is lyuyng. I wold not by my wille that ony of vs were matched with hym. Nay said sir Ga-wayne not so, it were shame to vs were he not assayed were he neuer soo good a knyghte, wel said syr Uwayne I wylle assaye hym afor yow, for I am more weyker than ye. And yf he smyte me doune, thenn may ye reuenge me, soo these two knyghtes cam to gyders with grete raundon that syr Uwayne smote syr Marhaus that his spere braste in pyeces on the sheld, and Syre Marhaus smote hym so sore that hors and man be bare to the erthe, and hurte syre Uwayne on the lyfte syde. Thenn syr Marhaus torned his hors and rode toward Gawayne with his spere, and when syr Gawayne sawe that, he dressid his sheld, and they a Jungryd their speres, and they cam to gyders with alle the myzte of their horses, that eyther knyght smote other so hard in myddes of theyr shieldes, but syr Gawayns spere brak, but sir marhaus spere helde. And therwith syre Gawayne and his hors rusched doune to the erthe. And lyghtly syr Gawayne rose on his feet, and pulled out his sword, and dressyd hym toward syr Marhaus on foote, and syr marhaus sawe that, and pulled outhe his sword and beganne to come to syr Gawayne on horsbak. Syre knyght said syr gawayn alxte on foote or els I wyll sle thy hors, gramercy sayd syr Marhaus of youre gentylnes ye tech me curtoye, for hit is not for one knyzt to be on foote, and the other on horsbak, & therwith syr Marhaus sette his spere agayne a tree and algyht and tayed his hors to a tree, and dressid his sheld, and eyther cam vnto other egerly, and smote to gyders with her swerdes that her sheldes flewen in cantels, and they brysed their helmes and their hauberkes and wounded eyther other, but Syre gawayne fro it passed ix of the clok waxed euer strongere and stronger, for thenne hit cam to the houre of noone & thryes his myghte was encresced. Alle this appyed syr Marhaus and had grete wonder how his myghte encresced, and so they wounded other passynge sore.
And thenne whan it was past noone, and whan it drewe toward cuensonge syre gawayns strengthe febled & waxt passynge saynte that vnenethes he myght dure ony lenger, and syr Marhaus was themne bygger and bygger, syre knyght said syr Marhaus, I haue wel felt that ye are a passynge good knyghte and a merueyllous man of myghte as euer I felt ony, whyle hit lasteth, And oure quarels are not grete, and therfor it were pyte to doo yow hurte, for I fele ye are passynge feble. A said syr Gawayyn gentyl knyghte ye say the word that I shold say. And therwith they took of theire helmes, and eyther kyssed other, and there they swore to gyders eyther to loue other as bretheren. And syr Marhaus prayd syr gawayyn to lodge with hym that nyghte. And so they toke theyr horses, and rode toward syr Marhaus hous. And as they rode by the wey, syr knyghte said syr gawayyn I haue merueylle that so valysaunt a man as ye be loue no ladyes ne damoysels. Syre sayd syr marhaus they name me wrongfully tho that gyue me that name, but wel I wote it ben the damoysels of the Turret that so name me and other suche as they be. Now shalle I telle yow for what cause I hate them. For they be sorceresses and eschaunters many of them, & be a knyght neuer so good of his body and ful of prowesse as man may be, they wille make hym a stark coward to haue the better of hym, and this is the pryndpal cause that I hate them & to al good ladyes and gentyl wymmen I owe my seruyse as a knyght ouzte to do. As the book rehercoth in freshabe ther were many knyghtes that ouer-matched syr gawayne for alle the thryes myghte that he had. Syr Launcelot de lake, syr Trystrams, syr Bors de ganys, syr Percevale, syr Pellias & syr Marhaus, these siks knyghtes had the better of sir gawayyn. Thenne within a lytel whyle they cam to syr Marhaus place, whiche was in a lytel Pryory, and there they algyhte and ladyes and damoysels vnarmed them, and bastely loked to theyr hurtes, for they were all thre hurte, and so they had all thre good lodgyng with syr Marhaus and good chere, for whan he wyst that they were kynge Arthurs syster sones, he maade them al the chere that lay in his power, and so they soiourned there a vii nyghte, and were wel easyd of their wounds and at the last departed. Now said syre Marhaus we wylle not departe soo lyztylye, for I wylle bryngye you thorow the forest. And rode daye by daye wel a seuen dayes or they fond ony auenture. At the last they cam in to a grete forest that was named the countreye and foreste of Arroy and the countrey of straunghe auentures. In this countrey sayd syr Marhaus cam neuer knyghte syn it was crystened, but he fonde straunge auentures, and soo they rode, and cam in to a depe valey ful of stones, and ther by they sawe a fayr streme of water, aboue ther by was the hede of the streme a fayr fontayne, & thre damoysels syttynghe therby. And thenne they rode to them, and eyther salewed othere, and the eldest had a garland of gold aboute her hede, and she was thre score wynter of age, or more, and her here was whyte vnder the garland. The second damoysel was of thyrty wynter of age with a serkelet of gold aboute her hede. The thyrd damoysel was but xv yere of age, and a garland of flouris aboute her hede. When these knyghtes had soo beholde them, they asked hem the cause why they sat at that fontayne, we be here sayd the damoysels for thys cause, yf we may see ony erraunt knyghtes to teche hem vnto straunge auentures, and ye be thre knyghtes that seken auentures and we be thre damoysels, and therfore ech one of yow must chose one of us. And whan ye haue done soo, we wylle lede yow vnto thre hyhe wayes, and ther ech of yow shal chose a wey and his damoysel with hym. And this day twelue monethe ye must mete here ageyn, and god sende yow your lyues, and there to ye must plyste your trouthe, this is wel said sayd syr Marhaus.

Now shalle everyche of vs chose a damoysel. I shalle telle yow sayd syre Uwayne I am the yongest and moost weykest of yow bothe, therfore I wyl haue the eldest damoysel, for she hath sene moche and can best helpe me whan I haue nede, for I haue moost nede of helpe of yow bothe. Now said syr Marhaus I wyll haue the damoysel of thyrty wynter age for she falleth best to me. Wel sayd syre gawayne, I thanke yow, for ye haue lefte me the yongest and the fayrest, and she is moost leuest to me. Thenne every damoysel took her knyght by the raynes of his brydel, and broughte him to the thre wayes, and there was their othe made to mete at the fontayne that day twelue moneth and they were lyuynge, and soo they kyest and departed, and everyche knyghte sette his lady behynd hym, and syr Uwayne took the wey that lay west. And syr Marhaus took the wey that lay southe, and syr gwayne took the wey that laye northe.

Now wylle we begynne at syr gwayne that helde that wey tyll that he cam vnto a fayre manoir where dwellyd an old knyghte & a good housholder, and there syr Gawayn asked the knyght yf he knewe any auentures in that coutrye. I shalle shewe yow somme to morne sayd the old knyghte, and that merueyllous. Soo on the morne they rode in to the forest of auentures tyl they cam to a launde, and ther by they fond a crosse, and as they stode and houed, ther cam by them the fayrest knyght and the semelyest man that euer they sawe, makyng the grettest dole that euer man made.
And thenne he was ware of syr gawayn and salewed hym and praid god to sende hym moche worship. As to that said syr gawayn gramercy. Also I praye to god that he send yow honour and worship.
A said the knyghte I may laye that on syde, for sorowe and shame cometh to me after worship.

Capitulum xxi.

And ther with he passed vnto the one syde of the launde. And on the other syde sawe syr Gawayne x knyghtes that houed styll and make hem redy with her sheldes and speres agaynst that one knyght that cam by syr gawayn. Themne this one knyght aentryst a grete spere, and one of the x knyghtes encountred with hym, but this woful knyght smote hym so hard that he felle ouer his hors taylle.
So this same dolorous knyght serued hem al, that at the lest way he smote doune hors and man, and alle he dyed with one spere, and soo whan they were all x on fote, they wente to that one knyght, and he stode stone styll, and suffred hem to pulle hym doune of his hors, and bound hym hande and foote, and tayed hym vnder the hors belly, and so ledde hym with hem. O Jhesu sayd syr gawayne this is a dooeleful syghte, to see the yonder knyghte so to be entreted, and it semeth by the knyghte that he suffreth hem to bynde hym soo, for he maketh no resystence. Noo said his hoost that is trouthe, for and he wold they al were to weyke soo to doo hym. Syr said the damoyesel vnto syr Gawyn, me semeth hit were youre worship to helpe that dolorous knyghte, for me thynketh he is one of the best knyghtes that euer I sawe. I wold doo for hym sayd syre gawyn, but hit semeth he wylle haue no helpe, thenne sayd the damoyesel me thynketh ye haue no luste to helpe hym. Thus as they talked they sawe a knypte on the other syde of the launde al armed sauf the hed. And on the other syde ther cam a dwerp on horsbak all armed sauf the hed with a grete mouthe, and a sherte nose. And thon the dwerp came nyghe he sayd where is the lady abold mete vs here, and ther with all she came forth out of the wood. And thenne they began to stryue for the lady. For the knyghte sayd he wold haue her, & the dwerp sayd he wold haue her. Wylle we doo wel sayd the dwerp, yonder is a knyght at the crose, lete vs put it bothe ypon hym, and as he demeth so shalle it be. I wylle wel sayd the knyght, and so they wente al thre vnto syre gawyn and tolde hym wherfor they strofe, well syrs sayd he wylle ye put the mater in my hand, ye they sayd both. Now damoyesel sayd syr gawyn ye shal stande betwixe them both, and whether ye lyst better to go to, he shal haue yow. And whan she was sette bitwene them both, she left the knyghte and wente to the dwerp, and the dwerp took her and wente his waye syngynge, and the knyghte wente hys wey with grete monnyng. Thenne came ther two knyghtes all armed and cryed on hygte Syre gawyn, knyghte of kynges Arhurs make the redy in al hast and Juste with me, soo they ranne to gyders that eyther felle doune, and thenne on foote they drewe their swerdes and dyd ful actually, the mene whyle the other knyghte wente to the damoyesel, and asked her, why she abode with that knyghte, and yf ye wold abide with me, I wylle be your feythful knyghte and with yow wylle I be said the damoyesel, for with syr Gawyn I may not fynde in myn herte to be with hym. For now here was one knyzt scomfye x knyghtes. And at the laste he was cowardly led awey, and therefore lete vs two goo whylest they fyghte, and syre Gawyn fought with that other knyghte longe, but at the last they accorded both. And thenne the knyght prayd syr gawyn to lodge with hym that nyghte. Soo as syre Gawyn wente with this knyghte he asked hym what knyghte is he in this countrey that amothe doune the ten knyghtes, for whan he had done so manfully he suffred hem to bynde hym hand and foote, and soo ledde hym away. A sayd the knyghte that is the best knyght I trowe in the world, and the moost man of prowesse, and he hath be serued soo as he was ène more than x tymes, and his name hyghte syr Pelleas, and he loueth a grete lady in this countrey and her name is Ettard, and soo when he loued her there was cryed in this countrey a grete Justes thre dayes. And alle the knyghtes of this countrey were there and gentlywymmen. And who that preued hym the best knyght shold haue a passyng good swerd and a Serklet of gold, and the serklet the knyght shold gyue hit to the fayrest lady that was at the Justes. And this knyghte syre Pelleas was the best knyghte that was there, and there were fyue hondred knyghtes, but there was neuer man that euer syre Pelleas met with al, but he stroke hym doune or els from his hors. And every day of thre dayes he strake doune twenty knyghtes, thersore they gaf hym the pryse, & forthe with all he wente there as the lady Ettard was, and gaf her the serklet, & said openly, she was the fayrest lady that there was, & that wold he preue vpon ony knyghte that wold say nay.

Ca. xxii.

And soo he chose her for his souerayyne lady, & neuer to loue other but her, but she was so proude that she had scorne of hym and sayd that she wold neuer loue hym thouz he wold dye for her, wherefor al ladynes and gentlywymmen hadde scorne of her that she was so proude, for there were fayrer than she, & there was none that was ther but & sir Pelleas wold haue proferd hem loue they wold haue loued hym for his noble prowesse, & so this knyzt promysed the lady ettard to folowe her in to this coûtrei, & neuer to leue her tyl she loued hym, & thus he is here the moost party nygher her and lodged by a pryory, and euer weke she sendeth knyghtes to fyzte with hym. And when he hath put hem to the wers than wylle he suffre hem wylfully to take hym prysoner by cause he wold haue a syghte of this lady. And alwayes she doth hym grete despyte, for some tyme she maketh her knyghtes to tayye hym to his hors taylle and some to bynd hym vnder the hors bely. Thus in the moost shame-fullest wyse that she can thynke he is brouthe to her. And alle she doth hyt for to cause hym to leue this countreye and to leue his lounge. But all this can not make hym to leue, for he wold haue foughte on foote he myghte haue had the better of the ten knyghtes as wel on foote as on horsbak. Allas sayd syr gawayn it is grete pyte of hym. And after this nyghte I wylle seke hym to morowe in this forest to doo hym alle the helpe I can. So on the morne syr gawayne toke his leue of his hoost syr Carados and rode in to the forest. And at the last he mette with syr Pelless makyn grete moone oute of mesure, so eche of hem salewed other, and asked hym why he made suche sorowe. And as it is aboue reherced, syre Pelless told syre Gawayne, but alwayes I suffre her knyghtes to fare soo with me as ye sawe yesterdaye in truste at the last to wynne her loue, for she knoweth wel alle her knyghtes shold not lyghtely wynne me, and me lyste to fyghte with them to the vttremeest. Wherfore I loued her not so sore I hadde leuer dyre an honderd tymes, and I myghte dye soo ofte rather than I wold suffre that despyte, but I truste she wylle haue pyte vpon me at the laste, for loue causeth manie a good knyght to suffre to haue his entent, but allas I am vdunfortunate. And ther with he maade soo grete dole & sorowe that vnethe he myghte holde hym on horsbac. Now sayd syre gawayne leue your mornynge and I shalle promyse yow by the feythe of my bodye to doo alle that lyeth in my power to gete yow the loue of your lady, and ther to I wylle plyte yow my trouthe. A sayd syr Pelless of what Courte are ye telle me I pryaye yow my good frend. And thenne syr gawayne sayd I am of the courte of kynges Arthor, and his susters sone, and kynges Lott of Orkeney was my fader, and my name is syre Gawayne. And thenne he sayd my name is Syre Pelless borne in the Iles, and of many Iles I am lord, and neuer haue I loued lady nor damoyssel tyl now in an vnhappy tyme, and syr knyghtes syn ye are soo nyghes cosyn vnto kynges Arthor and a kynges sone, therfor bytraye me not but helpe me, for I may neuer come by her but by somme good knyghte, for she is in a stronge castel here fast by within this four myle, and ouer all this countrey she is lady of. And so I may neuer come to her presence, but as I sufere her knyghtes to take me, and but yf I dyd so that I myghte haue a syghte of her I had ben dede long or this tymse, and yet fayre word had I neuer of her, but wha I am brought to fore her, she rebuketh me in the fowlest maner. And thenne they take my hors and harneis and putten me oute of the yates, and she wylle not sufere me to ete nor drynke, and alweyes I offfe me to be her prysoner, but that she wylle not sufere me, for I wold desyre no more what paynes so euer I had, soo that I myzte haue a syghte of her dayly. Wel sayd syr Gawayne, Al this shalle I amende and ye wylle do as I shal des-uyse. I wylle haue your hors and your armour, and so wylle I ryde vnto her castel and telle her that I haue slayne yow, and soo shal I come withynne her to cause her to cherysche me. And thenne shalle I doo my true parte that ye shalle not faylle to haue the louse of her.

And there with syr Gawayne plyghte his trouthe vnto syr Pelleas to be true and feythful vnto hym, soo eche one plyghte their trouthe to other, and soo they chaunged horses and harneis, and sire Gawayn departed, and came to the castel where as stooede the paun-lions of this lady withoute the yate. And as soone as Ettard had aspyed syr Gawayn she fledde in toward the castel, syre Gawayn spak on hyoge, and badde her abyde, for he was not syre Pelleas. I am another knyghte that haue slayne syr Pelleas, doo of youre helme said the lady Ettard that I maye see your vysage. And soo when she sawe that it was not syr Pelleas, she made hym slighte and ledde hym vnto her castel, and aske hym feythfully, whether he had slayne syr Pelleas, and he sayd her ye, and told her his name was syre gawayn of the courte of kyng Arthur and his syste sone. Truly sayd she that is grete pyt, for he was a passyng good knyghte of his body, but of al men on lyue I hated hym moost, for I coude neuer be quyte of hym. And for ye haue slayne hym, I shalle be your Woman and to doo ony thynge that myghte please.
syr Gawayne good chere. Thenne syr gawayne sayd that he loued a lady, and by no meane she wold loue hym. She is to blame sayd Ettard and she wylle not loue yow, for ye that be soo wel borne a man and suche a man of prowess, there is no lady in the world to good for yow. Wylle ye sayd syre Gawayne promyse me to doo alle that ye maye by the feythe of youre body to gete me the loue of my lady, Ye syre sayd she, and that I promyse yow by the feythe of my body. Now sayd syre Gawayne it is your self that I loue so wel, therfore I praye yow hold your promyse. I maye not chese sayd the lady Ettard, but yf I shold be forsworne, and soo she graunted hym to fulfylle alle his desyre.

Soo it was thenne in the moneth of May that she and syre Gawayn wente oute of the castel and souped in a pauelione, and there was made a bedde, and there syre gawayne and the lady Ettard wente to bedde to gyders, and in another pauelione she layd her damoysels, and in the thyrd pauelione she leyd parte of her knyghtes, for thenne she had no drede of syr Pelleas. And there syre gawayn lay with her in that pauelione two dayes and two nyghtes. And on the thyrd day in the mornynge syr Pelleas armed hym, for he hadde neuer slepte syn syr Gawayn departed from hym, for syr Gawayn had promysed hym by the feythe of hys body to come to hym vnto his pauelione by that pryory within the space of a daye and a nyghte. Thenne syre Pelleas mounted vpon horsbak, and cam to the paeulions that stode without the castel, and fonde in the fyrst paeulione thre knyghtes in thre beddes, and thre squyers lyggyng at their feet, thenne wente he to the seconde paeulione & fonde four gentlywymmen lypenge in four beddes, & thenne he yede to the thyrd paeulion & fonde syr gawayn lyggyng in bedde with his lady Ettard & eyther clyppynge other in armes, and whan he sawe that his herte wel nyghbe brast for soroue, & said Alas that euer a knyzt shold be founde so fals, and theine he took his hors & myst not abyde no lenger for pure sorowe. And whanne he hadde ryden nyghbe half a myle he torned ageyne and thoughte to sley hem bothe. And whanne he sawe hem bothe soo lye slepyng faste, vnethe he myght holde hym on horsbak for sorowe, and sayd thus to hym self, though this knyght be neuer soo fals I wyl neuer sley hym slepyng. For I wylle neuer destroye the hygh ordre of knyghthode, and therewith he departed aseyne.

And or he hadde ryden half a myle he retorned aseyne, and thoughte themne to sley hem bothe, makyng the grettest sorow that ever man made. And whanne he came to the pavelions, he tayed his hors vnto a tree, and pulled oute his swerd naked in his hand, and wente to them there as they lay, and yet he thought it were shame to sley them slepyng, and layd the naked swerd ouerthwart bothe their throtes, and soo tooke his hors and rode his waye.

And whanne syre Pelleas came to his pavelions, he told his knyghtes and his squyres how he had sped, and sayd thus to them, for your true and good seruyse ye haue done me I shal gyue yow alle my goodes, for I wylle goo vnto my bedde and neuer aryse vntyl I am dede. And whan that I am dede, I charge yow that ye take the herte oute of my body and bere it her betwyxe two syluer dysshes, and tell her how I sawe her lye with the fals knyght Syr Gawayne. Ryght soo syr Pelleas vnammed hym self and wente vnto his bedde makyng merueyllous dole and sorowe.

Thenne syre Gawayne and Ettard awoke of her slepe, & fonde the naked swerd ouerthwart theire throtes, thenne she knewe wel it was syr Pelleas swerd. Allas sayd she to sir Gawayne, ye haue bitrayed me and syr Pelleas bothe, for ye told me ye had slayne hym, and now I knowe wel it is not soo he is on lyue. And yf syre Pelleas had ben as vncurties to yow as ye haue ben to hym ye hadde ben a dede knyghte, but ye haue decuyened me and bytrayd me falsey, that al ladyes and damoysels may beware by yow and me. And therwith syr gawayne made hym redy, and wente in to the forest. Sso it happe thenne that the damoysel of the lake Nymue mette with a knyghte of syr Pelleas that wente on his foote in the forest makyng grete dole, and she asked hym the cause. And soo the woful knyghte told her how his myster and lorde was bitrayed thurgh a knyghte and a lady, and how he wylle neuer aryse oute of his bedtyl he be dede. Brynge me to hym sayd she anone, and I wyll warramt his lyf he shal not dye for loue, and she that hath caused hym so to loue, she shalle be in as euyl plyte as he is or it be long to, for it is no joy of suche a prowde lady that wylle haue no mercy of suche a valyaunt knyght, anone that knyzte broughte her vnto hym. And whan she sawe hym lye in his bedde, she thoughte she sawe neuer so lykely a knyght, and ther with she threwe an encchaument vpon hym, and he felle on slepe. And ther whyle she rode vnto the lady Ettard, and charged no man to awake hym tyl she came ageyne. Soo within two houres she broughte the lady Ettard thydder, and both ladyes fonde hym on slepe, loo sayd the damoysel of the lake ye oughte to be ashamed for to murder suche a knyght. And therwith she threwe suche an encchaument vpon her that she loued hym sore, that wel nyghe she was oute of her mynde. O lord Ihesus saide the lady Ettard, how is it befallen vnto me, that I loue now hym that I haue moost hated of ony man alyue, that is the ryghtwys jugement of god sayd the damoysel. And themne anone syr Pelleas awaked and loked vpon Ettard. And whan he sawe her, he knewe her, & thefe he hated her more than ony woman alyue, and said awey traitresse come neuer in my syst. And whan she herd hym say so, she wepte and made grete sorou oute of mesure.

Capitulo

Syr knyght Pelleas sayd the damoysel of the lake, take your hors, and come forthe with me oute of this countrey, and ye shal loue a lady that shal loue yow. I wyle wel said syr Pelleas, for this lady Ettard hath done me grete despyte and shame, and there he told her the begynnynge and endynge. And how he had purposed neuer to haue arysynyl that he hadde ben dede. And now suche grace god hath sente me, that I hate her as moche as euer I loued her thanked be our lord Ihesus. Thanke me sayde the damoysel of the lake. anone syr Pellæs armed hym and tooke his hors and commaundyd his men to brynge after his pauleions and his stuffe where the damoysel of the lake wold assigne, soo the lady Ettard dyed for sorowe, and the damoysel of the lake rejoysed syr Pelleas and loued to gyders durynge their lyf dayes.
Capitulum xxv.

Now torne we vnto syr Marhaus that rode with the damoysele of xxx wynter of age southard, and soo they cam in to a depe forest, and by fortune they were nyxsted, and rode longe in a depe way, and at the last they came vnto a courtelage, and there they asked herborow, but the mä of the courtelage wold not lodge them for no treatye that they coude treate, but thus moche the good man sayd, and ye will take the adventure of youre lodgyng, I shal brynge you there ye shalle be lodged. What auenture is that that I shal haue, for my lodgyng sayd syr Marhaus. Ye shalle wete whan ye come there sayd the good man, syr what auenture so it be bryng me thyder I pray the sayd syr Marhaus, for I am wery, my damoysele and my hors. So the good man wente and opened the gate, and within an houre he broughte hym vnto a fayre castel, and thenne the poure man called the porter, and anon he was lete in to the castel, & soo he told the lord how he brouzt hym a knyght erraunt and a damoysele that wold be lodged with hym, lete hym in said the lord, it may happen he shalle repente that they toke their lodgyng here. So syr Marhaus was lete in with torche lyghte, and there was a goodely syghte of yonge men that welcomed hym. And thenne his hors was ledde in to the stable, and he and the damoysele were broughte in to the halle, and there stode a myghty duke and many goodely men about hym, theëν the lord asked hym what he hyghte, and fro whens he cam, and with whome he dwelt, syr he said I am a knyghte of kynge Arthurs and knyght of the table round, and my name is syr Marhaus, and borne I am in Irland. And thenne sayd the duke to hym, that me sore repenteth, the cause is this, for I loue not thy lord, nor none of thy felawes of the table round. And therfor ease thy self this nyghte as wel as thow mayst, for as to morn I & my sike sonnes shal matche with yow. Is ther no remedy but that I must haue adoo with yow and your vi sonnes at ones sayd syr Marhaus. No sayd the duke for this cause I maade myn auowe, for syr ga-wayne slewe my seuen sonnes in a reounter, therfore I maade myn auowe, there shold never knyzt of kynge Arthurs court lodge with me or come there as I myght haue adoo with hym, but that I wold haue a rueungyng of my sonnes deethe. What is your name said syr Marhaus I requyre yow telle me and it please yow. Wete thow wel I am the duke of south marchys. A sayd sir Marhaus I haue herd saye that ye haue ben longe tyme a grete foo unto my lord arthur and to his knyghtes, that shalle ye fele to morne said the duke. Shalle I haue adoo with yow sayd syr Marhaus, ye sayd the duke, therof shalt thow not chese, and therfore take yow to your chambre and ye shalle haue all that to yow longeth. So syr Marhaus departed and was led to a chamber, and his damoyseel was led unto her chamber. And on the morn the duke sente unto syre Marhaus and bad make hym redy. And so syr Marhaus arose and armed hym, and thenne ther was a maeste songe afore hym and brake his fast, and so moued on horsbak in the court of the castell there they abold doo the batail. So ther was the duke al reddy on horsbak clene armed and his syxte sonnes by hym, and eueryche had a spere in his hand, and soo they encountred where as the duke and his two sonnes brak theyr spere vpon hym, but sir Marhaus helde vp his spere and touched none of them.

Thenne cam the foure sonnes by couple, and two of them brake their speres, and soo dyd the other two. And alle this whyle syre marhaus touched hem not. Thenne sir marhaus ranne to the duke, and smote hym with his spere that hors and man felle to the erthe. And so he serued his sonnes. And thenne syr Marhaus alyghte doune and bad the duke yelde hym or els he wold alye hym. And thenne some of his sonnes recoyred, and wold haue set vpon syr Marhaus. Thenne syr Marhaus sayd to the duke seace thy sonnes or els I will doo the vtermost to yow all. Thenne the duke sawe he myghte not escape the deth, he cryed to his sonnes and charged them to yelde them to syr Marhaus. And they kneled al doune, and put the pomels of their swerdes to the knyght, and soo he receyued them. And thenne they halp vp their fader, and soo by their comynal assente promysed to syr Marhaus neuer to be foes vnto kynge Arthur, and therupon at Whytsontyde after to come he and his sones and putte them in the kynge grace. Theme syr Marhaus departed and within two dayes his damoyssel brought hym where as was a grete tournement that the lady de Vawse had cryed. And who that dyd best shold hae a ryche serklet of gold worthe a thousand besauntes. And there syr Marhaus dyd so nobly that he was renome, & had somtyme doune fourty knyghtes, and soo the serklet of gold was rewarded hym. Thenne he departed fro thens with grete worship. And soo within seuen nyghtes his damoyssel brought hym to an erles place, his name was the erle Fergus, that after was syre Tristrams knyghte, and this Erle was but a yonge man, and late come in to his landes, and there was a gyant fast by hym that hyzte Taulurd, and he had another broder in Cornewaille that hyghte Taulas that syr Trystram slewe whanne he was oute of hys mynde. So this Erle maade his complaynte vnto syre Marhaus that there was a gyaunt by hym that destroyed al his landes, & how he durst nowhere ryde nor goo for hym. Syr sayd the knyghte whether veeth he to fyghte on horsbak or on foote, nay sayd the erle there maye no hors bere hym. Wel said syr marhaus theme wille I fyghte with hym on foote. Soo on the morn syr Marhaus prayd the erle that one of his men myghte brynge hym where as the gyault was, and so he was, for he sawe hym sytte vnder a tree of hooly, and many clubbes of yron and gyarsms about hym. Soo thys knyghte dressid hym to the gyant puttyng his sheld afore hym, and the gyant toke an Iron clubbe in his hande, & at the fyrste stroke he claf syre Marhaus sheld in ii pyeaces. And there he was in grete peryl, for the gyant was a wyly fyghter, but atte last syr Marhaus smote of his ryght arme aboue the elbowe, theñe the gyant fledde and the knyght after hym, and soo he drofe hym in to a water, but the gyant was soo hygte that he myghte not wade after hym. And thenne sir Marhaus made the erle Fergus man to fetche hym stonnes, & with tho stonnes the knyghte gaf the gyaut many sore knowkes, tyl at the last he made hym falle doune in to the water, & so was he there dede, theñe syr Marhaus wete vnto the gyants castel, and there he deluyuerd xxiii ladyes and twelue knyghtes oute of the gyants pryson, and there he had grete rychesse withoute nombre, soo that the dayes of his lyf he was never poure man. thenne he retorne to the erle Fergus, the whiche thanked hym greteley, and wold haue gyuen hym halfe his lades but he wold none take. Soo syr Marhaus dwellyd with the erle nyghe halfe a yere, for he was sore brysed with the gyant, and at the laste he took his leue. And as he rode by the way, he mette with syr gawayne and syr Uwayne, and so by aduenture he mette with foure knyghtes of Arthurs courte, the fyrst was syr Sagamarre desyrus, syr Ozanna, syr Dodynas le sauage, and syre felot of lystynoyse, and there syr Marhaus with one spere smote doune these foure knyghtes, and hurte them sore. Soo he departed to mete at his day afore sette.

Now tourne we vnto syr Uwayne that rode westwarde with his damoysele of thre score wynter of age, and she broughte hym there as was a turnement nyghe the marche of Walys, and at that turnement syre Uwayne smote doune xxx knyghtes, therfore was gyuen hym the prye, and that was a gerfaukon, and a whyte stede trapped with clothe of gold. Soo themne syr Uwayne dyd many straunge aven- tures by the meanes of the old damoysele, and so she broughte hym to a lady that was called the lady of the roche, the which was moche curtoys. So there were in the countrey two knyxtes that were bretheren, and they were called two peryllous knyghtes, the one knyghte hyght syre Edward of the reed castel, & the other syr Hue of the reed castel. And these two bretheren haddishetyed the lady of the roche of a Barony of landes by their extorsion. And as this knyxt was lodged with this lady she made her compleynyt to hym of these two knyghtes. Madame sayd syr Uwayne, they are to blame, for they doo ageynst the hyghe ordre of knyghtode & the othe that they made. And yf hit lyke yow I wille speke with hem by cause I am a knyghte of kynge Arthurs, and I wylle entrete them with fayrenesse. And yf they wyile not I shalle doo bataille with them and in the defense of youre ryghte. gramersey sayd the lady, and there as I maye not acquyte yow, god shalle. Soo on the morne the two knyghtes were sente for, that they shold come thyder to speke with the lady of the roche, and wete ye wel they sayled not, for they cam with an C hors. But whan this lady sawe them in this maner soo bygge, she wold not suffre syr Uwayne to goo oутe to them vpon no surete ne for no sayr langage, but she made hym speke with them ouer a toure, but fyndally these two bretheren wold not be entreated, and ansuerd that they wold kepe that they had. Wel said syr Uwayne, thanne wylle I fyghte with one of yow, and preue that ye doo this lady wronge, that wille we not said they, For and we doo bataille we two wyl fyghte with one knyzt at ones, and theryfore yf ye wille fyghte soo we ylle be redy at what houre ye wille assigne. And yf ye wynne vs in bataille the lady shal haue her landes ageyne, ye say wel sayd sir Uwayne, therfor make yow redy so that ye be here to morn in the defence of the ladyes ryght.

Capitulum xxviii.

So was there sykernesse made on both partyes that no treason shold be wroght on neyther partye, soo themme the knyghtes departed and made hem redy, and that nyghte syr Uwayn had grete chere. And on the morn he arose erly and herd masse and brake his fast, and soo he rode vnto the playn withoute the gates where houed the two bretheren abdyngne hym. Soo they rode to gyders passyng sere that syre Edward and syr Hue brake their spere vpon syr Uwayne. And syr Uwayne smote syre Edward that he felle ouer his hors and yet his spere brast not. And thenne he spored his hors and came vpon syr Hue and ouerthrawe hym, but they soone recouuerd and dressid their shieldes and drewe their suerdys and bad syre Uwayne alyghte and doo his bataill to the vtermost. Thenne syr Uwayn deouyded his hors sodenly, & put his sheld afore hym and drewe his swerde, and soo they dressyd to gyders, and eyther gaf other suche strokes, & there these two bretheren wounded syr Uwayne passyng greuously that the lady of the roche wende he shold haue dyed. And thus they fought to gyders fyue houres as men zaged oute of reason. And at the laste syr Uwayne smote syr Edward vpon the helme suche a stroke that his sword kerued vnto his camel bone, and thenne syr Hue abated his courage, but syr Uwayn pressed fast to haue slayne hym. That sawe syr Hue he kneled doune and yelde hym to syr Uwayne, and he of his gentilnesse re-cyued his sword and took hym by the hand & went in to the castel to gyders. Thenne the lady of the roche was passyng glad and the other broder made grete sorowe for his broders dethe, thenne the lady was restored of al her landes, and syr Hue was commaunded to be at the Courte of kynge Arthur at the next feest of pentecost. So sir Uwayn dwelt with the lady nyghe half a yere, for it was longe or he myghte be hole of his grete hurtes, and soo when it drewe nygh the terme day that syr gawayn, syr Marhaus and syre Uwayne shold mete at the crosse way, thenne every knyght drewe hym thyder to holde his promyse that they had made, & syr Marhaus and syr Uwayne broughte their damoysels with them, but sir Gawayn had lost his damoysele as it is afore reherced.

Capitulum xxix.

Right soo at the twelue monethes ende they mette alle thre knyghtes at the fontayne and their damoysels, but the damoysele that syr gawayn had coude saye but lytel worship of hym, soo they departed from the damoysels and roode thurgh a grete forest, and there they mette with a messager that cani fro kynge Arthur that had soughte them wel nyhe a xii moneth thorou oute al England, Walys and Scotland, and charged yf euer he myght fynde syre Gawayn and syre Uwayn to bryng hem to the courte augeyne. And thenne were they al gladdde, and soo prayd they syre Marhaus to ryde with hem to the kynges courte. And soo within twelue dayes they cam to Camelot, and the kyng was passyng glad of their comyng and soo was alle the Courte. Thenne the kyng made hem to swere vpon a book to telle hym alle theire adventures that had befallen hem that twelue monethe and soo they dyd. And there was sir Marhaus wel knownen, for ther were knyghtes that he had matched afore tyme, and he was named one of the best knyghtes lyuyng. Augeyne the feest of pentscost cam the damoysel of the lake and broughte with hir syr Pelleas, and at that hythe feest there was grete Justynge of knyghtes, and of al knyghtes that were at that Justes, syr Pelleas had the Pryse, and syr Marhauus was named the next, but syr Pelleas was soo stronge, there myght butFewe knyghtes sytte hym a buffet with a spere. And at that next feest sir Pelleas and syr Marhauus were made knyghtes of the table roûd. For there were two seges voyde, for two knyghtes were slayn that twelve moneth, and grete ioye had kyng Arthur of sire Pelleas and of sire Marhauus, but Pelleas loued neuer after sire Gawayne, but as he spared hym for the loue of kyng arthur. But oftyntes at justes and turnementes sire Pelleas quyte sire Gawayn, for so it reherceth in the book of Frensabhe. Soo sire Trystram many dayes after faughte with sire Marhauus in an yland, and there they dyd a grete bataylle, but at the last sire Trystram slewe hym, soo sire Trystram was wouded that vnethe he myght recouer and lay at a nonnyr halfe a yere, and sire Pelleas was a worshipful knyghte, & was one of the foure that encheued the sancreal, and the damoysel of the lake made by her meanes that neuer he had adoo with sire Launcelot de lake, for where sire Launcelot was at ony Justes or ony tornement, she wold not suffre hym be there that daye, but yf it were on the syde of syr Launcelot.

Explicit Liber quartus.
HANNE kyng Arthur had after longe werre rested, and helde a Ryal feeste and table rounde with his alyes of kynges, prynces, and noble knyghtes all of the round table, there cam in to his halle he syttynge in his throne Ryal, xii aucyen men, berynge eche of them a braunch of Olyue in token that they cam as Embassatours and messagers fro the Emperour Lucyus, whiche was called at that tyme, Dictatour or procurour of the publyke wele of Rome, whiche sayde messagers after their entryng & comyng in to the presence of kyng Arthur dyd to hym theyr obeysaunce in makynge to hym reverence saide to hym in this wyse. The hyghe & myghty Emperour Lucyus sendeth to the kyng of Bretayne gretyng, cōmaędyng the to knouleche hym for thy lord, and to sende hym the truage duce of this Royamme vnto thempyre, whiche thy fader and other to fore thy precessours haue paid as is of record. And thou as rebelle not knowynge hym as thy soueraynne withholdest and reteynest contrary to the statutes and decrees made by the noble and worthy Julius Cezar conquerour of this Royame, and fyrist Emperour of Rome. And ye thou refuse his demaund and commandment, knowe thou for cer-tayne that he shal make stronge werre aegynst the, thy Royames & londes, and shall chastyse the and thy subgettyes, that it shal be en-sample perpetuel vnto alle kynges and prynces, for to denye their truage vnto that noble empyre whiche domyneth vpon the vnuersal world. Thenne when they had shewed the effecte of their message, the kyng commaunded them to withdrowe them. And said he shold take suye of councaylle and gyue to them an ansuere. Thenne somm of the yonge knyghtes heryng this their message wold haue romme on them to haue slayne them, sayenge, that it was a rebuke to alle the knyghtes there beyng present to suffre them to saye so to the kyng. And anone the kyng commaunded that none of them vpon payne of dethe to myssaye them ne doo them ony harme, and com-maundd a knyghte to brynge them to their lodgyng, and see that they haue alle that is necessary and requysyte for them, with the best chere, and that noo deynete be spared. For the Romayns ben grete lordes, and though theyr message plese me not ne my court yet I must remembre myn honour. After this the kyng lette calle alle his lordes and knyghtes of the round table to councayle vpon this mater, and desyreth them to saye there aduys. thennen syr Cador of Cornewaille spacke fyrste and sayd. Syre this message lyketh me wel, for we haue many dayes rested vs and haue ben ydle, and now I hope ye shalle make sharp warre on the Romayns where I doubte not we shal gete honour. I byleue wel sayd Arthur that this mater pleaseth the wel, but these ansuers may not be answerd, for the demaund deareth me sore. For truly I wyl neuer paye truage to Rome, wherfore I pray yow to councaylle me. I haue vnderstande that Bellinus and Brenius kynges of Bretayne haue had empyre in their handes many dayes. And also Constantyn the sone of Heleyne, whiche is an open euidence that we owe noo trybute to Rome, but of ryght we that ben descended of them haue ryght to clayme the tytle of thempyre.
Capitulum Secundum.

Thenne answerd kyng Anguyshe of Scotland, Sir ye oughte of ryght to be aboue al other kynges, for vnto yow is none lyke ne paseyll in Cristendome, of knyghthode ne of dygnyte, & I counseyle you neuer to obeye the Romayns, for whan they regned on vs, they destressydoure elders, and putte this land to grete extorcions & taylles, wherfore I make here myn auowe to auenge me on them, and for to strengthye youre quarel I shal furnyshe xx M good men of warre and wage them on my costes, whiche shall awayte on yow with my self whan it shal please yow. And the kyng of lytel Bretayne graunted hym to the same xxx M, wherfor kyng Arthur thanked them. And thenne evry man agreed to make warre, and to ayde after their power, that is to wete the lord of Westwallis promised to brynge xxx M men. And syr Uwayne, syr Ider his sone with their cosyns promised to brynge xxx thousand. thenne syr lanceolot with alle other promised in lyke wyse every man a grete multytude. And whan kyng Arthur vnderstood theire courages and good wyiles, he thanked them hertely, and after lete calle thembassatours to here theire answere. And in presence of alle his lوردs and knyghtes be sayd to them in this wyse. I wyll that ye retorne vnto your lord and procurour of the comyn wele for the Romayns, and saye ye to hym, Of his demaunde and commande I sette nothyng. And that I knowe of no truage ne trybute that I owe to hym, ne to none ethely prynce, Cristen ne heten, but I pretende to haue and occuype the souersaynte of thempyre, wherin I am entytled by the ryght of my predecessours somtyme kynges of this lond, and saye to hym that I am delybered and fully concluded to goo wyth myn armys with strengthe and power vnto Rome by the grace of god to take possession in thempyre, and subdue them that ben rebelle, wherfore I commaunde hym and alle them of Rome that incontynent they make to me their homage & to knoueleche me for their Empeour and gouernour vpon payne that shall ensiewe. And thenne he commaunded his tresorer to gyue to them grete and large yestes, and to paye alle their dispensys, and assygned syre Cador to conueye them onte of the land, and soo they took their leue and departed, and tooke their shyppynge at Sandwyche, and passed forthe by flau-drys, Almayn, the montayns, and all ytalye vntyl they cam vnto Lucius. And after the reverence made, they made relacyon of their answer lyke as ye to fore haue herd. Whan themperour Lucius had wel vnderstonde theyre credence, he was sore neued as he had ben al araged, & sayd, I had supposed that Arthur wold haue obeyed to my commandement, and haue servued yow (me) hym self, as hym wel bysemed or ony other kyng to doo. O syre sayd one of the se-natours late be suche vayn wordes, for we late yow wete that I and my felawes were ful sore aferd to beholde his countenaunce, I fere me ye haue made a rodde for your self, for he entendeth to be lord of this empyre, whiche sore is to be doubted yf he come, for he is al another mā than ye wene, and holdeth the most noble courte of the world alle other kynges ne prynces maye not compare vnto his noble mayntene. On newe yeres daye we sawe hym in his estate whiche was the ryallest that euere we sawe, for he was servued at his table with ix kynges, and the noblest felaupship of other prynces, lordes, and knyghtes that ben in the world, and cuery knyghte approued and lyke a lord and holdeth table rōd. And in his persone the moost manly man that Iyeth, and is lyke to conquere alle the world, for vnto his courage it is to lytel, wherfore I aduyse yow to kepe wel youre marches and straytes in the montayns. For certaynly he is a lord to be doubted. Wel sayd Lucius bifoere Eester I suppose to passe the moūtayns and soo forth in to fraunce, and there byreue hym his londes with Janewayes and other myghty waryours of Tus-kane and lombardye. And I shall sende for them all that ben subgettyys and alyed to thepyre of Rome to come to myn ayde, and forthwith sente old wyse knyghtes vnto these countraycs folowynghe, fyrste to ambage and arrage, to Alysundrye, to ynde, to hermonye, where as the ryuer of Eufrates renneth in to Asye, to Auffryke, and Europe the large, to ertyne and Elamy, to Arabye, Egypte and to damaske, to damyte and Caye, to Capadoce, to tarce, Turkye, pounce and pampoylle, to Surrye and gallayce. And alle these were subgette to Rome and many moo, as Greece, Cypres, Macydone, Ca-labre, Cateland, portyngale with many thousandes of spaynarys.
Thus alle these kynges, dukes, and admirals assembled aboute Rome with xvi kynges attones with grete multytyde of peple. Whan themperour vnderstood their comyng, he made redy his Romayns, and alle the peple bytwene hym & Flaundres. Also he hadde gotten wyth hym fyfty Gesaintes whiche had ben engendred of sendys. And they were ordeyned to garde his persone, and to breke the frounte of the bataylle of kyng Arthur.

And thus departed fro Rome and came doune the montayns for to destroye the londes that Arthur had conquerd and cam vnto Coleyne, and bysegd a Castel there by, and wann it soone and stuffed hit with two honderd sarasyns or Infydeles, and after destroyed many fayr countrees, whiche Arthur had wonne of kyng Claudas. And thus Lucius cam with alle his hoost whiche were disperslyd lx myle in brede, and commanded them to mete with hym in Burgoyne, for he purposed to destroye the Royame of lytyl Bretayne.

Now leue we of Lucius the emperour and speke we of kyng Arthur, that commanded alle them of his retenue to be redy atte vtas of hyllary for to holde a parlement at yorke. And at that parlement was concluded to areste alle the nauye of the lond and to be redy within xv dayes at sandwyche, and there he shewed to his armye how he purposed to conquere thempyre whiche he ought to hase of ryght. And there he ordeyned two governours of this Royame that is to say Syre Bawdewyn of Bretayne for to counseille to the best and syr Constantyn sone to syre Cador of Cornewaylle, whiche after the dethe of Arthur was kyng of this Royamme. And in the presence of alle his lorde he resyned the rule of the royame and Gweneuer his quene to them, wherfore syre launcelot was wrothe, for he lefte syre Trystram with kyng marke for the loue of beale Isoule. Thence the quene Gweneuer made grete sorowe for the departynge of her lord and other, and swouned in suche wyse that the ladyes bare her in to her chambre. Thus the kyng with his grete armye departed leuyng the quene and Royamme in the gouernance of syre Bawduyn and Constantyn. And whan he was on his hors, he sayd with an hyhe voys yf I dye in this iourney I wyl that syre Constantyn by myn heyer and kyng crowned of this royame as next of my blood. And after departed and entred in to the see atte Sandwyche with alle his armye with a greete multitude of shyppes, galeyes, Cogges, and dromoundes, saylynge on the see.

And as the kyng laye in his caban in the shyp, he fyll in aalomerynge and dremed a merueyllous dreme, hym semed that a dredeful dragon dyd drowne moche of his peple, and he cam fleynge oute of the west, and his hede was enameled with asure, and his sholders shone as gold, his bely lyke maylles of a merueyllous Hewe, his taylle ful of tatters, his feet ful of fyne sable, & his clawes lyke fyne gold. And an hydous flamme of fyre fleywe oute of his mouthe, lyke as the londe and water had flammed all of fyre. After hym semed there came oute of thoryent, a grymly bore al blak in a clowde, and his pawes as bygge as a post, he was rugged lokynge roughly, he was the foulest beest that ever man sawe, he rored and romed soo hydously that it were merueill to here. Thenne the dredeful dragon auaunce hym and cam in the wynde lyke a fawcon guyngne grete strokes on the bore, and the bore hytte hym ageyne with his gryaly tuskes, that his brest was al blody, and that the hote blood made alle the see reed of his blood.

Thenne the dragon fleywe awey al on an heyzte, and came doune with suche a swough and smote the bore on the rydge whiche was x foote large fro the hede to the taille, and smote the bore all to powfre bothe fleshe and bonys, that it flytteryd al abrode on the see. And therwith the kyng awoke anone, and was sore abashed of this dreme. And sente anone for a wyse philosopher, commaundynge to telle hym the sygnyfycacion of his dreme. Syre sayd the philosopher, the dragon that thou dremedest of, betokeneth thy owne persone that sayllest here, & the colours of his wynges ben thy Royames that thou haste wonne, And his taylle whiche is al to tatterd sygnefyeth the noble knyghtes of the round table. And the bore that the dragon slough comynge fro the cloudes, betokeneth some tyrant that tormenteth the peple, or els thow arte lyke to fyghte with somme Geaunt thy self, beynge horryble and abhomynable whoso pere ye sawe neuer in your dayes, wherfore of this dредeful dreme doubthe the no thynge, but as a Conquerour come forth thy self. Thene after this soone they had syghte of londe and saylled tyl they arryued atte Barflete in Flaundres, and whanne they were there he fond many of his grete lorde redy, as they had ben commaunded to awayte vpon hym.

Capitulum v.

Trenne came to hym an husband man of the countrey, and told hym how there was in the countre of Constantyn bysde Bre-tayne a grete gyaunct whiche hadde slayne murthered and deuoured moche peple of the countreye and had ben susteyned seuen yere with the children of the comyns of that land, in soo moche that alle the children ben alle slayne and destroyed, and now late he hath taken the duchesse of Bretayne as she rode with her meyne, and hath ledde her to his lodgynge whiche is in a montayne for to rauyshe and lye by her to her lyues ende, and many people folowed her moo than v C, but alle they myghte not rescowe her, but they lefte her shrykyng and cryenge lamentably, wherfore I suppose that he hath slayn her in fulfyllynge his fowle lust of lechery. She was wyf vnto thy Cosyn syre Howel, whome we calle ful nyhe of thy blood. Now as thow a ryghtful kynge haue pyte on this lady, and reuenge vs al as thow arte a noble conquerour. Alas sayd kynge Arthur, this is a grete meschye, I had leuer than the best Royame that I haue, that I hadde ben a forlonge way to fore hym for to haue rescowed that lady.
Now felawe sayd kynge Arthur canst thou brynge me there as thys gyaunt haunteh, ye syre sayd the good man, loo yonder where as thow seest tho two grete fyres, there shalt thou fynde hym, and more tresour than I suppose is in al Fraunce. Whanne the kynge hadde vnderstanden this pyteous caas, he retorned in to his tente.
Thenne he callyd to hym syre kaye and syre Bedewere, & commanded them secretefully to make redy hors and harmes for hym self and them tweyne. For after euensonge he wold ryde on pylegrengage with them two only vnto saynt Mychels mounte. And thenne anone he mad hym redy, and armed hym at alle poynete, and toke his hors and his sheld. And soo they thre departed thens and rode forthe as faste as euer they myzt tyl that they cam to the forbond of that mount. And there they alyghted, and the kyng commanded them to tarye there, for he wold hym self goo vp in to that mounte. And soo he ascended vp in to that hylle tyl he cam to a grete fyre, and there he fonde a careful wydowe wrynkyng her handes and makyng grete sorowe sytynge by a greue newe made. And thenne kyng Arthur sawed her, and demaunded of her wherfore she made suche lamentacion, to whom she answerd and sayd, Syre knyghete speke softe, for yonder is a deuyll ye here the speke, he wyll come and destrye the. I hold the vnhappy what dost thou here in this mountayne. For ye ye were suche fyfty as ye be, ye were not able to make resystence ageynst this deuyll, here lyeth a duchesse seide the whiche was the payrest of alle the world wyf to syre Howel, duc of Bretayne, he hath murthred her in foreynge her, and hath althyte her vnto the nauyl. Dame sayd the kyng, I come fro the noble Conqueroure kyng Arthur for to treate with that tyrant for his lyge peple. Fy on suche teatrys sayd she, he sette th not by the kyng ne by no man els. But and yf thou haue broughte Arthurs wyf dame Gueneuer, he shalle be gladder than thou haddest gyven to hym half fraunces. Beware approche hym not to nygh, for he hath vaynquysshed xv kynges, and hath mase hym a cote ful of precious stones enbritened with theyre berdes, whiche they sente hym to haue his loue for saucion of theyr peple at this laste Crystmasse. And yf thou wyll, speke with hym at yonder grete fyre at souper. Wel sayd Arthur I wyll accomplisyhe my message for al your seordful wordes, and wente forthe by the creast of that hylle, and sawe where he satte atte souper gnawynge on a lymme of a man, bekynge his brode lymmes by the fyre and brecheles, and thre sayf damoyesels tornynge thre broches wheron were broched twelue yonge children late borne lyke yunge byrdes. Whanne kyng Arthur beheld that pyteous syzte, he had grete compassion on them so that his hert bledde for sorowe, and hayled hym sayyng in this wyse, be that alle the world waldeth gyue the shorthe lyf & shamefull deeth. And the deuyl haue thy soule, why hast thou murthred these yonge Innocent children, and murthred this duchesse. Therfore aryse and dresse the thow gloton. For this day shalt thou dye of my hand. Thenne the gloton anone started vp and tooke a grete clubbe in his hand, and smote at the kynge that his coronal fylle to the erthe, and the kynge hytte hym aegyn that he carf his bely and cutte of his genytours, that his guttes & his entraylles fylle doune to the ground. Thenne the gyaunt threwe away his clubbe, and caught the kynge in his armes that he crushyed his rybbes. Thenne the thre maydens knelyd doune and callyd to Cryst for helpe and confort of Arthur. And thenne Arthur weltred and wrong, that he was other whyle vnder and another tyne aboue. And so weltryng and walowyng they rolled doune the hylle, tyl they came to the see marke, and euere as they soo weltred, Arthur smote hym with his daggar, and it fortuned they came to the place, where as the two knyghtes were and kepte Arthurs hors. thenne when they sawe the kynge fast in the gyaunts armes, they came and losed hym. And thenne the kynge com-maundede sryr kaye to smyte of the gyaunts hede, and to sette it vpon a truncheon of a spere, and bere it to syre howel, and telle hym that his enemy was alyayne, and after late this hede be bounden to a barbycan that alle the peple may see and behold hit, and go ye two vp to the montayn, and fetch me my sheld, my suerd and the clubbe of yron. And as for the tresour take ye it, for ye shalle fynde there good oute of nombre. So I haue the ketyl and the clubbe I desire no more. This was the fyerst gyaunt that euer I mette with, sauf one in the mount of Arabe, whiche I overcame, but this was gretter and fyerset. Thenne the knyghtes sette the clubbe and the kyrtyl, and some of the tresour they took to them self, and retorned aegyn to the host. And anone this was knowen thurgh alle the countrey, wherfor the peple came and thanked the kynge. And he sayd aegyne yeue the thanke to god, and departe the goodes amonge yow. And after that kynge Arthur sayd and commaundede his Coysn bowel that he shold ordeyne for a churche to be bylded on the same hylle in the worship of saynte Mychel. And on the morne the kynge remeuyd with his grete bataylle, and came in to Champayne and in a valey, and there they pyght their tentys, and the kynge beynge set at his dynner, ther cam in two messagers, of whome that one was Marchal of frauce and sayd to the kynge that themperour was entryd in to fraunce, and had destroyed a grete parte and was in Burgoy, and and destroyed and made grete slaughter of peple & brente townes and borowes, wherfor yf thou come not hastely, they must yelde vp their bodyes and goodes.

Capitulum sextum.

Theenne the kynge dyd doo calle syre Gawayne, syre Borce, syr Lyonel and syre Bedewere, and commaundyed them to goo strayte to syre Lucius, and saye ye to hym that hastily he remeue oute of my land. And yf he wil not, bydde hym make hym redy to bataylle and not distresse the poure peple. Thenne anone these noble knyghtes dressyd them to horsbak. And whanne they came to the grene wood, they saue many pauelions sette in a medowe of sylke of dyuerse colours beseide a ryuer. And themperours pauelione was in the myydle with an egle displayed abowe. To the whiche tente our knyghtes rode toward, and ordeyned syr Gawayn and syre Bors to doo the message, And lefte in a bussheement syre Lyonel, and syre Bedwere.
And thenne syre Gawayn and syr Borce dyd their message, and commaundyed Lucius in Arthurs name to auoyde his lond, or shortly to adee hym to bataylle. To whome Lucius ansuerde and sayd ye shallc retorne to your lord and saye ye to hym that I shall subdue ym and alle his londes. Thenne syre Gawayn was wrothe and sayde I hadde leuer than alle Fraunce fyghte ageynste the, and soo hadde I saide syr Borce leuer than alle Bretayne or burgoyne.
Thenne a knyght named syre Gaynus nyghre cosyn to the Emperyour sayde, loo how these Bretons ben ful of pryde and boost, and they bragge as though they bare vp alle the worlde. Thenne syre Ga-wayne was sore greued with these wordes, and pulled oute his swerd and smote of his hede. And therwith torned theyr horses and rode over waters and thurgh woodes tyl they came to theyre bussaument, where as syr Lyoenel and syr Bedeuer were houyng. The romayns followed fast after on horsbak and on foote over a chispayn vnto a wood, thenne syr Boors tornd his hors, and sawe a knyghte came fast on, whome he smote thurgh the body with a spere that he fylle dede doune to the erthe, thenne cam Callyburne one of the strengst of paysye and smote doune many of Arthurs knyghtes. And when syr Bors sawe hym do soo moche harme he adressyd toward hym & smote hym thurz the brest that he fylle doune dede to the erthe. Thenne syr Feldenak thought to reuenge the dethe of gaynus vpon syre Gawayn, but syre gawayn was ware therof and smote hym on the hede, which stroke styned not tyl it came to his breste. And thenne he returned and came to his felawes in the bussaument. And there was a recomtire, for the bussaement brake on the Romayns, and slewe and hewe doune the Romayns and forced the Romayns to flee and retorne, whome the noble knyghtes chaced vnto theyr tentes. Thenne the Romayns gadred more peple, and also foote men cam on, and ther was a newe bataille and soo moche peple that syr Bors and syr Berel were taken, but whan syre gawayn sawe that, he tokke with hym syre Idrus the good knyght and sayd he wold neuer see kynge Arthur but yf he rescued them, and pulled out galatyn his good swerd, and followed them that ledde tho ii knyghtes awaye, and he smote hym that lad syre Bors, and took syr Bors fro hym and deleyuerd hym to his felawes And syre Idrus in lyke wyse rescowed syr Berel. Thenne beganne the bataill to be grete that our knysteres were in grete jeopardie, wherfore syre Gawayn sente to kynge Arthur for socour and that he hye hym for I am sore wounded, and that oure prysoners may paye good oute of nombre. And the messenger came to the kyng and told hym his message. And anon the kynge dyd doo assemble his armye, but anone or he departed the prysoners were comen, and syre gawayn and his felawes gate the felde and put the Romayns to flyght, and after returned and came with their felawship in suche wyse, that no man of worship was loste of them, sauf that syr Gawayn was sore hurte. Thenne the kynge dyd do ranaakse his wounds and comforted hym. And thus was the begynnynge of the fyrst iourney of the brytons and Romayns, and ther were slaye...
143 of the Romayns moo than ten thousand, and grete ioye and myrthe was made that nyghte in the hoost of kyngge Arthur. And on the morne he sente alle the prysoners in to parys vnder the garde of syre launcelot with many knyghtes & of syr Cador.

Capitulum vii.

Now torne we to the Emperour of Rome whiche aspyed that these prysoners shold be sente to Parys, and anone he sente to leyve in a busehement certayne knyghtes and prynces with syxty thousand men for to rescowe his knyghtes and lorde that were prysoners.
And so on the morne as Launcelot and syre Cador chyuetyyns and gouernours of all them that conueyed the prysoners as they shold pe asse thurgh a wode, syr Launcelot sente certayne knyghtes tespuye yf ony were in the woodes to lette them. And whanne the said knyghtes cam in to the wood, anone they aspyed and sawe the grete enbusehement, and retorned and told syr Launcelot that ther lay in a wayte for them thre score thousand Romayns. And thenne syr Launcelot with suche knyghtes as he hadde and men of warre to the nombre of x M put them in araye and met wyth them and foughte with them manly, and slewe and dretenchid many of the Romayns, and slewe many knyghtes & admurals of the party of the Romayns and sarayns, ther was slayne the kynde of lylye and thre grete lorde Aladuke, herawde, and heringdale, but syr Launcelot fought so nobly that no man myght endure a stroke of his hande, but where he came he shewed his prowesse and myght, for he slewe doune ryght on every syde. And the Romayns and sarayns fledde from hym as the shee spe fro the wulf or fro the lyon, and putt them alle that abode daluy to flyght. And so longe they fouzete that tydnynges came to kyngge Arthur. And anone he graythed hym and came to the ba-taille, and sawe his knyghtes how they had vaynquyshed the batayle, he embrazed them knyght by knynte in his armes and said ye be worthy to welde all your honour and worship, there was neuer kyngge sauf my self that had so noble knyghtes. Syr sayd Cador there was none of vs failled other, but of the prowesse and manhode of syre Launcelot were more than wonder to telle, and also of his cosyns whiche dyd that daye many noble feates of werre. And also syre Cador tolde who of his knyghtes were slayne, as syr Beriel & other syr Morys and syr Maurel two good knyghtes, thenne the kyng wepte and dryed his eyen with a keuerchye, & sayd your courage had nere hand destroyed yow. For though ye had returned ageyne, ye had lost no worship. For I calle hit foly, knyghtes to abyde when they be ouermatched. Nay sayd Launcelot and the other. For ones shamed maye neuer be recouerd.

Capitulum viii.

Now leue we kyng Arthur and his noble knyghtes whiche had wonne the felde, and had brought theyre prysoners to parys, and speke we of a senatour whiche escaped fro the bataille, and came to Lucius themperour & sayd to hym, Syre emperour I aduyse the for to withdrawe the, what doet thou hear, thou shalt wyne noo thynges in these marches but grete strokes oute of al mesure. For this day one of Arthurs knyghtes was worth in the batayll an hondred of ours. Fy on the sayd Lucius thou spekest cowardly, for thy wordes greue me more than alle the loose that I had this day, and alone he sende forth a kyng whiche hyghte syr leomye with a grete armye, and badde hym hye hym fast to fore, and he wold folowe hastely after. kyng Arthur was warmed pryuely, & sente his peple to Sessoyne, and toke vp the townes & castels fro the Romayns. Thenne the kyng commaunded syr Cador to take the rereward, & to take with hym certayne knyghtes of the round table, and syre Launcelot, syre Bors, syr kay, syre Marrok with syre Marhau shalle awaye on our persone. Thus the kyng Arthur disperplyd his boost in dyuere partyes, to thende that his enemies shold not escape. Whanne the Emperour was entryd in to the vale of Sessoyne, he myghte see where kyng Arthur was enbatailled and his baner dys-played, and he was bysette round aboute with his enemies, that nedes he must fyghte or yelde hym, for he myght not flee. But sayd openly vnto the Romayns, syrs I admoneste you that this day ye fyghte and acquyte yow as men, and remembre how Rome domyneth and is chyef and hede ouer alle the erthe and vnyuersal world, and suffre not these bretons thys day to abyde ageynste vs, & ther with he dyd commaunde hys tröpettes to blowe the blody sownes in suche wyse that the ground trembled and dyndled. Thenn the bataills approached and shoue and shoutted on bothe sydes and grete strokes were smyten on bothe sydes, many men ouerthrown, hurte, & slayn and grete valyaunces, prowesses and appertyses of werre were that day shewed, which were ouer long to recounte the noble feates of every man. For they shold conteyne an hole volume. But in especyal kyngge Arthur rode in the bataille exhortynge his knyghtes to doo wel, and hym self dyd as nobly with his handes as was posyble a man to doo, he drewe oute Excalibur his sword, and awayted euer where as the romayns were thynkest and moost greued his peple, and anone he addressed hym on that parte and hewe and slewe doune ryzt and rescued his peple, and he slewe a grete gyaunt named galapas, whiche was a man of an huge quantyte and heyghte, he shorted hym and smote of bothe his legges by the knees, sayenge, Now arte thow better of a syse to dele with, than thou were, and after smote of his hede. there syre gawayn foughte nobly and slewe thre admoryales in that bataill. And so dyd alle the knyghtes of the round table. Thus the bataill bitwene kyngge Arthur and Lucius themperour endured longe. Lucius had on his syde many sarasyns, which were slayn, and thus the bataille was grete, and ofstydges that one party was at a fordele and anone at an afterdele, whiche endured so longe tyl at the last kyng Arthur aspyed where Lucius themperour fought, and dyd wonder with his owne handes. And anon he rode to hym, And eyther smote other fyersly, and atte last Lucius smote Arthur thwart the vysage, and gaf hym a large wound. And whanne kyng Arthur felte hym self hurte, anon he smote hym ageyne with Excalibur that it cleft his hede fro the someete of his hede, and styncted not tyl it cam to his breste. And thenne themperour fylle doune dede, and there ended his lyf. And whan it was knowne that themperour was slayne anone alle the Romayns with all their hoost put them to flyght, and kyngge Arthur with alle his knyghtes folowed the chaos, and slewe doune ryght alle them that they myghte atteyne.
And thus was the victory gynen to kynge Arthur & the trympe, and there were slayne on the party of Lucius moo than an honerd thousand. And after kyng Arthur dyd doo ransake the dede bodyes, and dyd doo burye them that were slayne of his reteneu every man accordyng to the state & degree that he was of, And them that were hurte he lethe the surgyens doo serche their hurtes and woundes, and commanded to spare no salues ne medecynes tyll they were hole.

Thenne the kyng rode strayte to the place where themperour lucius lay dede, and with hym he fond slayne the Sowdan of Surrey, the kyng of Egypte and of Ethyope, whiche were two noble kynges with xvii other kynges of dyuerse regyons, and also syxty senatours of Rome al noble men, whome the kyng dyd do bawme and gomme with many good gommes aromatyk, and after dyd do cere them in syxty fold of cered clothe of Sendale, and leyd them in chestys of leed, by cause they shold not chauffe ne sauoure, and ypon alle these bodyes their shieldes with there armes and baners were sette, to thende they shold be knowen of what countrey they were. and after he fonde thre Senatours whiche were on lyue to whome he sayd, for to saue your lyues I wylle that ye take these dede bodyes, and carye them with yow vnto grete Rome, and presente them to the potesate on my behalue shewyng hym my letters, and telle them that I in my persone shal hastely be atte Rome. And I suppose the Romayns shalle beware how they shal demaunde any trybut of me. And I commaunde yow to saye whan ye shal come to Rome to the potesate and all the councyle and Senate, that I sende to them these dede bodyes for the trybute that they haue demaund. And yf they be not content with these, I shal paye more at my comyng, for other trybute owe I none, ne none other wylle I paye. And me thynketh this plyseth for Bretayne, Irland and al Almeyne with germanye. And furthermore I charge yow to saye to them, that I commaunde them vpon payne of theyre hedes neuer to demaunde trybute ne taxa of me ne of my londes.

Thenne with this charge and commaundement the thre Senatours afore sayd departed with alle the sayd dede bodyes leynge the body of Lucius in a carre couerd with tharmes of the Empyre al alone. And after alwey two bodyes of kynges in a charyot, and thenne the bodyes of the Senatours after them, and soo went toward Rome, and shewed theyr legacyon & message to the potestate and Senate, recountyng the bataylle done in Fraunce, and how the feld was lost and moche people & Innumerable slayne. Wherfore they adyysed them in no wyse to meue no more warre ageynste that noble conqueroure Arthur. For his myght and prowese is most to be doubted, seem the noble kynes and grete multytude of kynghtes of the round table, to whome none ertye prynce may compare.

Capítulo nono.

Now torne we vnto kynge Arthur and his noble kynghtes whiche after the grete bataylle achaeued ageynste the Romayns, entryd in to Lorayne, braken and Flaundres, and sythen returned in to hault Almayn, and so ouer the mótayns in to lombardy, and after in to Tuscan, wherein was a Cyte, whiche in no wyse wold yelde them self ne obeye, wherfore kynge Arthur biseged it, and lay longe aboute hit, and gaf many assaults to the Cyte. And they within defended them valyauntly. Thenne on a tyme the kynge called syr florence a knyght, and sayd to hym they lacked vytyall, and not ferre from hens ben grete forestes and woodes, wherein ben many of myn enemies with moche bestayyl. I wyld that thou make the redy and goo thyder in foreyeng, and take with the syr Gawayn my newe, Syre Wysehard, syre Clegys, Syre Clermond, and the Captayn of Cardef with other, & bryenge with yow alle the beastes that ye there can gete. And anone these knyghtes made them redy, and rode ouer holtyes & hillyys, thurgh forestes and woodes, tyl they cam in to a fayr medow ful of fayre flooure and grasse. And there they rested them & theyr horses alle that myghte. And in the sprynynge of the day in the next more, syre Gawayn took his hors and stale away from his felauship to seke some adventures. And anon he was ware of a man armed walkynge his hors easily by a wodes syde, and his sheld laced to his sholdre syttyng on a stronge courser withoute ony man sauyng a page berynge a myghty spere. The knyght bare in his sheld thre gryffons of gold in sable charbuncle the chyef of sylvuer. Whan syre Gawayn aspyed this gay knyght, he fewtryd his spere and rode strayt to hym, and demaunded of hym from whens that he was, that other ansuered and sayd he was of Tuscan, and demaunded of syre gawyn, what profryst thou proude knyghte the so boldly, here getest thou no praye, thou mayst proue wha thou wylt, for thou shalt be my prysoner or thou departe.

Thenne sayd gawayn, thou ausauntest the gretely and spekest proude wordes. I coiccyule the for alle thy boost that thou make the redy, and take thy gere to the, to fore gretter grame falle to the.

Capitulum x.

Thenne they took theyr speres and ranne ech at other with alle the myghte they had, and smote ech other thurg their sheldes in to theyr sholders, wherfore anone they pulld oute their swerdes, and smote grete strokes that the fyre sprange oute of their helmes. Thenne syre gawayne was al abased, and with galatyn his good swerd he smote thurg shelede and thycke hauberke made of thyck maylles and al to russen and brake the precious stones, and made hym a large wounde, that men myghte see bothe theuyer and long. Thenne groned that knyght, and adressyd hym to syre Gawayn, & with an awke stroke gaf hym a grete wound and kytte a vayne, whiche greued gawayn sore, and he bledde sore. Thenne the knyghte sayd to syre Gawayn, bynde thy wounde or thy bleed chaunge, for thou bybledest al thy hors and thy fayre armes. For alle the Barbour of Bretayne shall not conne staunche thy blood. For who someuer is hurte with this blade he shalle neuer be stauched of bledynge. Thenne ansuered gawyn hit greuth me but lytyll, thy grete wordes shalle not feare me ne lasse my courage, but thou shalt suffre tene and sorow or we departe, but telle me in hast who maye staunche my bledynge. That may I doo sayd the knyght yf I wylle. And so wyl I yf thou wylt socoure and ayde me that I maye be crystned and byleue on god. And therof I requyre the of thy manhode, and it shalle be grete meryte for thy soule. I graunte said Gawayne so god helpe me tacomplyyshe alle thy desyre. But fyrst telle me what thou soughtest here thus alone, and of what londe and legeaunce thou arte of. Syre he sayd my name is Pryamus, and a grete prync is my fader, and he hath ben rebelle unto Rome and ouer ryden many of theyr londes. My fader is lyneally descended of Alysaunder and of hecstor by ryght lygne. And duke Josue and Machabeus were of oure lygne. I am ryght enherytour of Aly-saunder and auffryke and alle the oure yles, yet wyl I blyeue on thy lord that thow blyeuest on, And for thy loubre I shalle yeue the tresour ynoough. I was soo elate and hauteyn in my hert that I thought no man my pere ne to me semblable. I was sente in to this werre with seuen score knyghtes, and now I haue encountred with the which haste gyuen to me of fghtyng my fylle, wherfore syr knyghte I praye the to telle me what thow arte. I am no knyght sayd gawyn. I haue ben brought up in the garderobe with the noble kynge Arthur many yeres for to take hede to his armour and his other aray, and to poynthe his paltockes that longen to hym self.
At yole last he made me yoman and gaf to me hors and harneys and an honderd pound in money. And yf fortune be my frend, I doubte not, but to be wel auaunced and holpen by my lyege lord. A sayd Pryamus, yf his knauys be so kene and fyters, his knyztes ben pass-ynge good. Now for the kynge louse of heuen whether thou be a knaue or a knyghte telle thou me thy name. By god sayd syre Ga-wyn, Now wyl I saye the sothe, my name is syre gawyn and knowen I am in his courte and in his chambre, and one of the knyztes of the round table, he dubbed me a duke with his owne hand.
Therfore grutche not yf this grace is to me forntune, hit is the goodnesse of god that lente to me my strengthe. Now am I better pleasyd sayd Pryamus than thou haddest gyuen to me al the prouynce and pars the rych. I had leuer to haue ben torn with wylde horses, then ony varlet had wonne suche loos, or ony page or prynker shold haue had pryss on me. But now syre knyzhte I warne the, that here by is a duke of Lorayne with his armye and the noblest men of Dolphyne and lordes of lombardye, with the garneson of godard, and sarasyns of Southland y1 nombred lx M of good men of armes, wherfore but yf we hye vs hens, it wylle harme vs bothe, for we ben sore hurte, neuer lyke to recover, but take hede to my page that he no horne blowe. For ye he could then ben honyng here fast by an C knytes awaytyng on my persone, and ye they take the, ther shall no raunson of gold ne syluer acquyte the. Thenne syre gawyn rode ouer a water for to saue hym, and the knyghte folowed hym, and soo rode forthe tyyl they came to his felawes, whiche were in the medowe, where they had ben al the nyghte. Anone as syre Wychard was ware of syre gawyn and sawe that he was hurte, he ranne to hym soroufully wepyng, and demaunded of hym who had soo hurte hym, and gawyn told how he had foughten with that man, and eche of them hadde hurte other, and how he had salues to helo them, but I can telle yow other tydylnges, that soone we shal haue adoo with many enemyes. Thenne syre pryamus and syre gawyn alyghted, and let theire horses grace in the medowe and vnarmed them. And thenne the blood ranne fresshly fro theyre woundes. And pryamus toke fro his page a vyolle ful of the four waters that came oute of paradyss, and with certayne baume enoyned their woundes, and wesehe them with that water, & within an houre after, they were both as hole as euer they were. And thenne with a trompet were they alle assembled to councellyle. And there pryamus told vnto them, what lordes and knyghtes has sworne to rescowe hym, and that without fail they shold be assailed with many thousandes, wherfor he councelled them to withdrawe them. Thenne syre gawyn sayd it were grete shame to them to auoyde withoute ony strokes. Wherefore I aduyse to take oure armes and to make us reyly to mete with these sarayns and mysbyleuyng men, and wyth the helpe of god we shal ouerthrowe them and haue a fayre day on them. And syre Florens shall abyde styll in thys felde to kepe the stale as a noble knyghte, and we shal not forsake yonder felawes. Now sayd Pryamus seesse your wordes, for I warne yow ye shal fynde in yonder woodes many peryllous knyghtes, they wylle put forthe beeestes to calle yow on, they be out of nombre, and ye are not past vii C which ben ouer fewe to fyght with soo many. Neuertheles sayd syr gawyn we shal ones encountere them, and see what they can do, and the beste shalle haue the vyctory.
Capitulum xi.

Thenne syre Florence callyd to hym syre Floridas with an honerd knyghtes and droofe forth the herde of bestes. Thenne folowed hym vii honerd men of armes, and syr Feraunt of spayne on a fayr stede came sparyngnge oute of the woodes, and came to syre Florence and aseyd hym why he fledde. Thenne syre Florence took his spere, and rode aegynste hym, and smote hym in the forhede and brake his necke bone. Thenne all thother were meued, and thought to avenge the dethe of syr Feraunt, and smote in amonge them, and there was grete fyghte and many slayne and leyd doune to grounde, and syr Florence with his C knyghtes alway kepeth the stale and foughte manly. Thenne whan Pryamus the good knyght perceyued the grete fyghte, he wente to syre Gawayn, and badde hym that he shold goo and socoure his felauship, whiche were sore bystad with their enemies. Syr greue yow not sayd syre Gawayn, For theyr gree shall be theirs. I shall not ones meue my hors to them ward, but yf l see mo than ther ben, For they ben stronge ynoough to matche them, & with that he sawe an erle called syre Ethelwold and the duke of duchemen cam lepyng out of a wood with many thousades & pryamus knyztes, & cam strayte vnto the bataylle, theñe sir gawayn comforted his knyghtes, and bad them not to be abasshed, for al shal be ours, theñe they began to wallope & mette with their enemyes, ther were me slayn & ouerthrown on evey syde. Thenne threstyd in amonge them the knyghtes of the table round, and smote doune to the erthe alle them that wythstode them, in soo moche that they made them to recuyelle & flee. By god sayd syre Gawayn this gladeth my herte, for now ben they lasse in nombre by xx M. Thenne entryd in to the bataylle Jubaunce a gesaunt, and fought and slewe doune ryght and distresseyd many of our knyghtes, amonge whome was slayne syre Gherard a knyght of Walys. Thenne oure knyghtes toke herte to them, and slewe many sarasyns. And thenne came in syr Pryamus with his penon, and rode with the knyghtes of the round table, and fought so manfully that many of their enemyes lost theyr lyues. And ther syr Pryamus slew the Marquys of Moyses land, and syre gawayn with his felawes so quytt he hem that they had the feld, but in that stoure was syr Chestelayne a chylde and ward of syre Gawayne slayne, wherfore was moche sorou made, and his deth was soone avengyd. Thus was the bataille ended and many lorde of lombardye and saraysns left dede in the feld.

Thenne syre florence and syre Gawayne herberowed surely theyr peple, and token grete plente of bestyal of gold & syluer and grete tresour and rychesse, and returned vnto kyng Arthur whiche lay styl at the syege. And whanne they came to the kyng, they presented theyr prysoners and recounted theyre adventures, and how they had vaynquysshed theyre enemies.

Capitulum xii.

Now thanked be god sayd the noble kyng Arthur. But what maner man is he that standeth by hym self hym seved no prysoner.
Syre sayd Gawayne this is a good man of armes, he hath matcheth me, but he is yolden vnto god and to me for to bycome Cristen, had not he haue be we shold neuer haue returned, wherfore I pray yow that he may be baptysed, for ther lyseth not a nobler man ne better knyght of his handes, thenne the kyng lete hym anon be crystned, and dyd doo calle hym his fyrste name Pryamus, and made hym a duke and knyghte of the table round. And thenne anon the kyng lete do crye assaule to the cyte, and there was reynygge of laddres, brekyng of wallys and the dyche fylleth, that men with lytell payne myst entre in to the cyte. theiæ cam out a duchesse, & Clarysyn the countesse with many lides & damoyes, and knelyng biforner kyng Arthur requyred hym for the loue of god to receyue the cyte, & not to take it by assaule for thenne shold many gyttles be slayne. theiæ the kyng aualyd his vyser with a meke & noble coutenaunce, & said madame ther shal none of my subgettys mysado you ne your maydens, ne to none that to yow longen, but the duke shal abyde my jugement. thenne anone the kyng commaunded to leue the assaule, & anon the dukses oldest son brought out the keyes, & knelyng delevored them to the kyng, & bysouzt hym of grace, & the kyng seased the toun by assent of his lordes, & toke the duc & sent hym to douer there for to abyde prysoner terme of his lyf & assigned cer-tayn rentes for the dower of the duchesse & for her children. Thenne he made lordes to rule tho londes & lawes as a lord ought to do in his owne countrey, & after he took his jouney toward Rome, & sent sir Florys & syc Floridas to fore with v C men of armes, & they cam to the cyte of vrbyne & leid there a busshement there as them semed most best for them, & rode to fore the toun, where anon yssued out moche peple & scarriussed with the fore ryders. Thëne brake out the busshement & wan the brydge & after the toun, & set vpon the wallis the kynges baner, theëe cam the kyng vpon an hille & sawe the Cyte & his baner on the wallys, by whiche he knewe that the Cyte was wonne, & anone he sente & commaunded that none of his lyege men shold defoule ne lygge by no lady, wyf, ne maide, & whan he cam in to the cyte, he passid to the castel, and comforted them that were in sorou, & ordeyned ther a captayn a knyzt of his own coutrey. & whan they of Melane herd that thylk cyte was wone, they sent to kyng Arthur grete sômes of money, & besouzt hym as their lord to haue pyte on them, promysyng to be his subgettys for euer, & yeilde to hym homage & faite for the lades of plesaunce & paurye, petalsayant & the port of tremble, & to gyue hym yerly a melyon of gold al his lyf tym. Thëne he rydeth in to Tuske & wyneth tounes & castels & wasted al in his way that to hym wil not obeye, & so to spolute and viterbe, & fro thens he rode in to the vale of vyce-coûte among the vynes. And fro thens he sente to the senatours to wete, whether they wold knowe hym for theyr lord. But soone after on a saterday cam vnto kyng Arthur alle the senatours that were left on lyue, and the noblest Cardynals that themne dwellyd in Rome. And prayd hym of pese, and profered hym ful large. And bysought hym as gouernour to gyue licence for vi wekes for to assemble alle the Romyns. And themne to crowne hym Emperor with creme as it bylongeth to so hyhe astate. I assente sayd the kyng lyke as ye haue deuyed, and at crystemas there to be crowned, and to holde my round table with my knyghtes as me lyketh. And themne the senatours maade redy for his Intronyssyon. And at the day appointed as the Romaunce telleth he came in to Rome, and was crowned emperour by the popes hand with all the ryalte that coude be made. And sudgender there a tyme, and estabylshed all his londes from Rome in to Fraunce, and gaf londes and royammes vnto his seruauntes and knyghtes to eueryche after his desert, in suche wyse that none complayned rych e ne poure, & he gafe to syre Pryamus the duchye of Lorayne, and he thanked hym, and sayd he wold serue hym the dayes of his lyf, and after made dukes and erles, and made euery man ryche. Thenne after this alle his knyghtes and lordes assembled them afore hym, and sayd blessyd be god your warre is fynyshed and your conquest achiued, in soo moche that we knowe none soo grete ne myghty that dar make warre ageynst yow. Wherfore we byseche you to retorn homeward, and gyue vs lycencce to go home to oure wyues, fro whome we haue ben longe, and to reste vs, for your journey is fynyshed with honour & worship. Thenne sayd the kyng, ye saye trouthe, and for to tempte god it is no wyysedome. And therfore make you redy and retorn we in to England. Thenne there was trussying of harnis and bagage and grete caryage. And after lyncce gyuen, he retorned and commaunded that noo man in payne of dethe shold not robb ne take vytyllle, ne other thynge by the way but that he shold paye therfore.
And thus he came ouer the see and londed at sandwyche, ageynste whome Quene Gweneuer his wyf came and mette hym, and he was noble recuyed of alle his comyns in euery cyte and burgh, and grete yfetes presented to hym at his home comyng to welcome hym with.

Thus endeth the fyfte bookes of the conqueste that kyng Arthure hadde ageynste Lucius the Empereour of Rome, and here foloweth the sixt book, whiche is of sye Launcelot du Lake.
Capitulum primum.

OONE after that kyng Arthur was come, fro rome in to England, themme alle the knyghtes of the table round resorted vnto the kyng, & made many justes & turnementes, & some there were that were but knyztes whiche encreeaed so in armes and worship that they passed alle their felawes in prowesse and noble dedes, and that was wel preued on many. But in especyal it was preued on syre launcelot du lake, for in al turnementys and justes and dedes of armes both for lyf and deth he passed al other knyztes, and at no tyme he was neuer ouercome, but yf it were by treson or enchaunte-ment, so syr Launcelot encreeaed soo merueyllously in worship, and in honour, therfor is he the fyrst knyzt that the Frenshe book makest mencon of after kynges Arthur came fro rome, wherfore quene gweneuer had hym in grete fauour aboue al other knyghtes. And in certayne he loued the quene agyne aboue al other ladyes & da-moyseels of his lyf. And for her he dyd many dedes of armes and saued her from the fyer thorou his noble chyualry. Thus syre launcelot rested hym longe with play & game. And thenne he thought hym self to preue hym self in straunge auentures. thenne he badde his neuewe syre Lyonel for to make hym redy, for we two wylle seke auentures. So they mounted on their horses armed at al ryghtes, and rode in to a depe forest & soo in to a depe playne. And thenne the weder was hote about noone, and syre launcelot had grete lust to slepe. Thenne syr lyonel aspyed a grete Appyl tree that stode by an hedge, & said broder yonder is a fayre shadowe, there maye we reste vs onoure horses, hit is wel saide faire broder said syr launcelot, for this vii yere I was not so slepy as I am now, and so they there alyghted & tayed their horses vnto sondry trees, and so syr launcelot layd hym doune vnder an appyl tree, and his helme he layd vnder his hede. And Syre lyonel waked whyle he alyghted. Soo syre launcelot was a slepe passynge fast. And in the mene whyle there came thre knyghtes rydynge as faste felynge as euer they myghte ryde. And there followed hem thre but one knyghte. And whanne syr lyonel sawe hym, hym thought he sawe neuer so grete a knyghte nor soo wel farynge a man neyther soo wel apparailled vnto al ryghtes. Soo within a whyle this strong knyghte had ouertaken one of these knyghtes, and there he smote hym to the colde erth that he lay stylle. And than he rode vnto the second knyght, and smote hym soo that man and hors felle doune. And thenne streyyghte to the thyrde knyghte he rode and smote hym behynde his hors ars a spere length. And thenne he alyghte doune and arayned his hors on the brydel & bonde alle the thre knyghtes fast with the raynes of their owne brydels. Whan syr lyonel sawe hym doo thus, he thought to assay hym, & made hym redy & stylly, and pryuele he took his hors & thoughte not for to awake syr launcelot. And whan he was mounted vpon his hors, he ouertoke this strong knyghte, & bad hym torne, and the other smote syr lyonel so hard that hors & man he bare to the erthe, & so he alyght doun & bound hym fast and threwe hym ouerthwart his owne hors, and soo he serued hem al foure, & rode with hem awye to his owne castel. And whan he came thare he garte vnarme them & bete hem with thornys al naked, & after put hem in a depe pryson where were many mo knyghtes that made grete doloure.
Capitulum secundum.

When syre Ector de marys wyst that syre launcelot was past out of the court to seke aduentures he was wroth with hym self, & made hym redy to seke syre launcelot, & as he had ryden long in a grete forest he mette with a man was lyke a foster. Fayre felaw said syre Ector knowest thou in thys countrey ony aduentures than ben here ngyhe hand. Syr sayd the foster, this countrey knowe I wel, and here by within thys myle, is a stronge manoir and wel dyked, & by that manoir on the lyfte hand there is a faire fourde for horses to drynke of, and ouer that fourde there growtheth a fayr tree, and theron hangen many fayre sheldes that welded somtyme good knyghtes, & atte hoole of the tree hangeth a bacyn of coper & latoen, and stryke vpon that bacyn with the but of thy spere thryes. And soone after thou shalt here newe tydynges. And ellys hast thou the fayrest grace that many a yere had euer knyght that passed thorou this forest. Gramercy sayd syre Ector, and departed, and came to the tree and sawe many fayre sheldes. And amonge them he sawe his broders sheld syr Lyonel and many moo that he knewe that were his felawes of the round table, the whiche greued his herte, and promysed to reuenge his broder. Thenne anone syr Ector bete on the bacyn as he were wood, and thenne he gaf his hors drynke at the fourde, & ther came a knyghte behynd hym, and bad hym come oute of the water and make hym redy, and syre Ector anone tornde hym shortly and in fewer cast his spere and smote the other knyghte a grete buffet that his hors tornde twyes aboute. This was wel done said the strong knyzt, & knyatly thou hast stryken me. And therwith he rushed his hors on syre Ector, and cleyzte hym vnder his ryght arne & bare hym clene out of the sadel, and rode with hym away in to his owne halle, & throwe hym doune in myddes of the floore, the name of thys knyghte was syre Turquyne, than he said vnto syre Ector for thou hast done this day more vnto me than ony knyghte dyd these xii yeres. Now wille I graunte the thy lyf so thou wilt be sworn to be my prysoner all thy lyf dayes. Nay said sir Ector, that wyle I neuer promyse the, but that I will do myne auauntage, That me repenteth sayd syre Turquyne, and thenne he garte to vnarne hym and bete hym with thornyss all naked, and sythen putte hym doune in a depe dungeon where he knewe many of his felawes.
But whan syre Ector sawe syre lyonel thenne made he grete sorowe: Allas broder sayd syr. Ector, where is my broder syre Launcelot.
Fayre broder I lefte hym on slepe whan that I from hym yode vnder an appel tree, and what is become of hym I can not telle yow. Allas said the knyghtes, but syre launcelot helpe vs we may neuer be delyuerd, for we knowe now noo knyght that is able to matche oure mayster Turquyn.

Capitulum tertium.

Now leue we these knyghtes prysoners and speke we of syre Launcelott du lake that lyeth vnder the Appyl Tree slepynge, even aboute the noone there come by hym foure quenes of grete estate.
And for the hete shold not nyhe hem there rode foure knyghtes aboute hem, and bare a clothe of grene sylke on foure sperys betwixe them and the sonne. And the quenes rode on foure whyte mules.

Thus as they rode they herde by them a grete hors grymly neye, thenne were they ware of a slepynge knyghte that laye alle armed vnder an appyl tree, anone as these quenes loked on his face, they knewe it was syre launcelot. Thenne they beganne for to stryue for that knyghte, everychone sayd they wold haue hym to her lous.
We shalle not stryue sayd Morgan le fay that was kyng Arthurs yster, I shalle putte an enchauntment vpon hym, that he shalle not aweke in syxe owres. And thenne I wylle lede hym away vnto my castel. And whanne he is surely within my hould, I shalle take the enchauntment from hym. And thenne lete hym chese whyche of vs he wylle haue vnto peramour. Soo thys enchauntment was caste vpon syre Launcelott. And thenne they leyd hym vpon his sheldes, and bare hym soo on horsback betwixt two knyghtes, and brought hym vnto the castel charyot, and there they leyd hym in a chambyr cold, and atte nyghte they sente vnto hym a fayre damoyssel with his souper redy dyght. By that the enchauntment was past. And wha she came she saluewed hym, and asked hym what chere. I can not saye fayre damoyseel said syre Launcelot, for I wote not how I cam in to this castel, but it be by an enchauntment. Syre sayd she ye must make good chere. And yf ye be suche a knyzt as it is sayd ye ben, I shalle telle you more to morne by pryme of the daye. Gramercy fayre damoyseel sayd syre Launcelot of youre good wyl I re-quyre yow. And soo she departed. And there he laye alle that nyght withoute conforte of ony body.

And on the morne erly came these foure quenes passyngly wel bysene. Alle they byddyng hym good morne, and he them agyeune. Syre knyghte the foure quenes sayd thow must vnderstande thou arte our prysoner, and we here knowe the wel that thou arte syre Launcelot du laske, kynge Bans sone. And by cause we vnderstande your worthynes that thou arte the noblest knyght lyuyng. And as we knowe wel ther can no lady havre thy loue but one, and that is quene Gueneuer, and now thow shalt lose her for euer and she the, and therfore the behoueth now to chese one of vs four. I am the quene Morgan le fay quene of the land of Gorre, and here is the quene of Northgalys and the quene of Eastland, and the quene of the oute yles. Now chese one of vs whiche thow wyll haue to thy peramour, for thou mayst not chese or els in thyss pryson to dye. This is an hard caas sayd syre Launcelot that eyther I muste dye or els chese one of yow, yet had I leuer to dye in this pryson with worship than to haue one of yow to my peramour maugre my hede. And therfore ye be answerd I wyll none of yow for ye be fals enchaunt-tresses. And as for my lady dame Gueneuer, were I at my lyberthe as I was, I wolde preue hit on you or on yours, that she is the truest lady vnto her lord lyuyng. Wel sayd the quenes, is this your answere that ye wyll effewe vs, ye on my lyf sayd syr laücelot, effused ye ben of me. Soo they departed and lefte hym there alone that made grete sorowe.
Capitulum quartum.

Right so at the noone came the damoysele vnto hym with his dyne, and asked hym what chere, truly sayre damoysele sayd syre Launcelot in my lyf dayes neuer so ylle, sir she sayd that me repentest, but and ye wylle be reulyd by me, I shal help you out of this distresse, and ye shal haue no shame nor vlyony soo that ye hold me a promyse, sayre damoysele I wil graunte yow, and sore I am of these quenes sorcersesses aferd, for they haue destroyed many a good knyght, syre sayd she that is sothe and for the renome and bounte that they here of you, they wold haue your loue, and sir they sayne, your name is syre Launcelot du laske the floure of knyghtes, & they be passyng wrothe with yow that ye haue refused hem. But syre and ye wold promyse me to helpe my fader on tuesdaye next com-yng, that hath made a turnement betwixe hym and the kynge of Northgalys, for the last tuesdaye past my fader lost the felde thorough thre knyghtes of Arthurs courte. And ye wyl be there on tuesday next comynge, and helpe my fader to morn or pryme by the grace of god I shalle delyuer yow clene. Fayre mayden sayd syr launcelot telle me what is your faders name, and thenne shal I gyue you an answer. Syre knyghte she sayd, my fader is kyng Bagdemagus that was foule rebuked at the last turnement. I knowe your fader wel sait syre launcelot for a noble kyng and a good knyghte.

And by the feythe of my body ye shalle haue my body redy to doo your fader and you servyse at that day. Syre she sayd gru-nercy, and to morn awayte ye be redy by tymes and I shal be she that shal delyuer you, and take you your armoure and your hors shelde and sper. And here by within this x myle is an Abbey of whyte monkes, there I praye you that ye me abyde, and thyder shal I brynge my fader vnto you. alle thys shal be done saide syre Laun-celot as I am true knyghte, and soo she departed and came on the morn erly, and found hym redy, thenne she brought hym oute of twelue lockes & brouz hym vnto his armoure, & whan he was clene armed, she brought hym vntyl his owne hors, and lyghtely he sadeled hym and toke a grete sperre in his hand, and soo rode forth, and sayd fayre damoyssel I shal not faile you by the grace of god. And soo he rode in to a grete forest all that day, and neuer coude fynde no hyghe waye, and soo the nyght felle on hym, and thenne was he ware in a slade of a paelione of reed sendel. By my faythe sayd syre launcelot in that paelione wil I lodge alle this nyghte, and soo there he algyht doune and tayed his hors to the paelione, and there he vnarmed hym, and there he fond a bedde, and layd hym theryn, and felle on slepe sadly.

Capitulum v.

Thenne within an houre there came the knyghte to whome the paelione ought. And he wende that his lema had layne in that bedde, and soo he laid hym doune besyde syr Launcelot, and toke hym in his armes and beganne to kysse hym. And whanne syre launcelot fele a rough berd kysynge hym, he starte oute of the bedde lyghtely, and the other knyzt after hym, and eyther of hem gate their swerdes in thire handes, and oute at the paelione dore wente the knyghte of the paelione, and syre launcelot folowed hym, and ther by a lytel slake syr launcelot wounded hym sore nyghte vnto the deth. And thenne he ymeld hym vnto syre launcelot, and so he graunted hym so that he wold telle hym why he came in to the bedde. Syre sayd the knyght the paelione is myn owne, and there thys nyght I had assynged my lady to haue slepte with me. And now I am lykely to dye of this wounde, that me repenteth sayd Launcelot of youre hurte, but I was adrad of treson, for I was late begyled, and therfore come on your way in to your paelione and take your rest. And as I suppose I shalle stauche your blood, and soo they wente bothe in to the paelione. And anone syre launcelot stauched his blood.

There with al came the knyghtes lady, that was a passynge fayre lady. And whanne she aspyd that her lord Belleus was sore wounded she cryd oute on syre launcelot, and made grete dole oute of mesure. Pees my lady and my loue said Belleus, for this knyght is a good man and a knyght aduenturous, and there he told her all the cause how he was wouled. And whan that I yolde me vnto hym, he lefte me goodely and hath staunched my blood. Syre sayd the lady I requyre the telle me what knyght ye be, and what is youre name. Fayr lady he sayd, my name is syre launcelot du lake. soo me thought euer by your speche sayd the lady, for I have sene yow ofte or this, and I knowe you better than ye wene. But now and ye wold promyse me of your curtosy for the harmes that ye haue done to me and to my lord Belleus that whanne he cometh vnto Arthur's courte for to cause hym to be made knyghte of the roud table, for he is a passyng good man of armes and a myghty lord of landes of many oute yles.

Fayre lady said syre launcelot let e hym come vnto the courte the next hyhe feest, and loke that ye come with hym, and I shal doo my power, and ye preue you doughty of your handes that ye shalle haue your desyre. So thus within a whyle as they thus talked the nyghte passed, and the daye shone, and thenne syre launcelot armed hym, and took his hors, and they taught hym to the Abbaye and thyder he rode within the space of two owrys.

Capitulum sextum.

And soone as syre launcelott came withyn the Abbeye yarde, the doughter of kyng Bagdemagus herd a grete hors goo on the paignement. And she thyme aroos and yede vnto a wyndowe, and there she sawe syr launcelot, and anone she made men fast to take his hors from hym, & lete lede hym in to a stabyl, and hym self was ledde in to a fayre chamber, and vnaarmed hym, and the lady sente hym a longe gonne, & anone she came her self. And thene she made launcelot passyng good chere, and she sayd he was the knyxt in the world was moost welcome to her. Thenne in al haste she sente for her fader Bagdemagus that was within xii myle of that Abbay, and afore euen he came with a fayre felauship of knygthes wyth hym. And whanne the kyng was alyghte of his hors he yode streyte vnto syr launcelots chamber, and there he fond hys doughter, and thenne the kyng embraced syr Launcelot in hys armes and eyther made other good chere. Anone syre launcelot made his complaynt vnto the kynge how he was bytrayed, And how his broder syre lyonel was departed from hym, he wyst not where, and how his daughter had delyuerd hym out of pryson, therfor whyle I lyue I shal doo her seruyse and al her kynred. Thenne am I sure of youre helpe sayd the kynge on tewesday next comynge, ye syr sayd syr launcelot, I shalle not saylle yow, for soo I haue promysed my lady your daughter.
But syre what knyghtes be they of my lord Arthurs that were with the kynge of Northgalys, and the kynge sayd it was syre madore de laporte, and syr Mordred and syr gahalaytyne that al fur fared my knyghtes, for ageynst hem thre I nor my knyghtes myghte bere no strengthe. Syre sayde syre launcelot as I here say that the turnement shal be here within this thre myle of this abbay, ye shal sende vnto me thre knyghtes of yours suche as ye trust and loke that the thre knyghtes haue al whyte sheldes & I also & no paynture on the sheldes, and we four will come out of a lytel wood in mydles of both partyes, and we shalle faile in the frounte of our enemyes & grete hem that we may. And thus shal I not be knowen what knyght I am. Soo they took their rest that nyght, and thys was on the sony-day, and soo the kynge departed, and sente vnto syre launcelot thre knyghtes with the four whyte sheldes.

And on the tewesday they lodged hem in a lytyl leuned wood besyde there the turnement shold be. And there were scaffoldis and holes that lordez and ladyes myghte beholde and to gyue the pryse.
Thenne came in to the feld the kynge of Northgalys with eyght score helmes. And thenne the thre knyghtes of Arthurs stode by them self. Thenne cam in to the feld kynge Bagdemagus with four score of helmys. And thenne they fewtryd their sperys, and cam to gyders with a grete dasse, & there were slayn of knyghtes at the first recontre xii of kynge Bagdemagus parte, and syx of the kynge of Northgalys party, and kynge Bagdemagus party was ferre sette a back.
Capitulum septimum.

Wyt that came syr Launcelot du lake and he threste in with his sperre in the thynkest of the prees, and there he smote doune with one sperre fyue knyghtes, and of foure of hem he brake their backes. And in that throng he smote doune the kyng of Northgalys, and brake his thyre in that falle. Alle thyse doyng of syre Launcelot sawe the thre knyghtes of Arturys. Yonder is a shrewde gest sayd syre Madore de la port, therfore haue here ones at hym, soo they encoutrted, and syre Launcelot bare hym doune hors and man, soo that his sholder wente oute of lyth. Now besalleth it to me to Juste sayd Mordred, for syr Mador hath a sore falle. Syre Launcelot was ware of hym, and gate a grete sperre in his hand, and mette hym and syr Mordred brake a sperre vpon hym, and syre launcelot gaf hym suche a buffet that the arson of his sadel brake, & soo he flewe ouer his hors tayl that his helme butte in to the erthe a foote and more that nyhe his necke was broken, & there he lay longe in a swoune. Thenne came in syr Gahalantyne with a grete sperre, and Launcelot ageynst hym with al theyre strenth that they myzr dryeue that both her speres to brast euene to their handes, and themne they flang out with their swerde and gaf many a gryme stroke. Themne was syr launcelot wroth oute of mesure, and thene he smote syr galahantyne on the helme that his nose braste oute on bloode and eerys and mouthe bothe, and ther with his hede henge lowe. And ther with his hors ranne awaye with hym, and he felle doune to the erthe.

Anone there with al syre launcelot gate a greete sperre in hys hand. And or euer that grete sperre brake, he bare doune to the erthe xvi knyghtes some hors and man, and some the man & not the hors, & ther was none but that he hyt surely he bare none armes that day. And thene he gate another grete sperre & smote doune twelue knyghtes, and the moost party of hem neuer throfe after. And thene the knyztes of the kyng of nort galys wold Juste no more. And there the gree was gyuen to kyng Bagdemagus. So eyther party departed vnto his owne place, and syr launcelot rode forth with kyng Bagdemagus vnto his castel, and there he had pas-ynge good chere both with the kyng and with his doughter, and they proffred hym grete yeftes. And on the morne he took his leue, and told the kyng that he wold goo and seke his broder syre Lyonel that wente from hym whan that he slepte, so he toke his hors, and be-taught hem alle to god. And there he sayd vnto the kynges doughter yf ye haue nede ony tyme of my seruyse I praye you let me haue knoueleche, and I shal not faylle you as I am true knyght, and so syr launcelot departed, and by adventur he came in to the same forest, there he was take slepyng. And in the myddes of an hyhe way he mette a damoysel rydyng on a whyte palfroy, and there eyther salewed other. Fayre damoysel said syre launcelot knowe ye in this country ony adventures, syre knyghte sayd that damoysel, here are adventures nere hand, and thou durst preue hem. Why shold I not preue adventures said syre launcelot for that cause come I hyder. Wel sayd she thou semest wel to be a good knyght. And yf thou dare mete with a good knyght, I shal brynge the where is the best knyght, and the myghtyest that euer thou fond, so thou wylt tell me what is thy name, and what knyght thou arte, damoysel as for to telle the my name I take no grete force. Truly my name is syre launcelot du lake, syre thou bysemyst wel, here ben adventuere that fallen for the, for here by duelleth a knyght that wylle not be ouermatched for no man I knowe but ye ouermatche hym, & his name is syre Turquyne. And as I vnderstand he hath in his pryson of Arthurs courte good knyghtes thre score and foure, that he hath wonne with his owne handes. But whan ye haue done that journey ye shal promyse me as ye are a true knyght for to go with me and to helpe me, and other damoysels that are distressid dayly with a fals knyght. All your entente damoysel and desyre I wylle fulfylle, soo ye wyl brynge me vnto this knyghte. Now fayre knyghte come on your waye, and soo she broughte hym vnto the fourde and the tre where henghe the bacyn. So sir launcelot lete his hors drynke, and sythen he bete on the bacyn with the butte of his spere so hard with al his myzt yl the bottom felle oute, and longe he dyd soo but he sawe noo thynge. Thenne he rode endlong the gates of that manoyre nyghe half an houre. And thenne was he ware of a grete knyxt that drofe an hors afore hym, and ouerthwarte the hors there lay an armed knyght bounden. And euer as they came neere and neere, syre launcelot thoust he shold knowe hym. Thenne sir launcelot was ware that hit was syre gaberys Gawayne broder a knygthe of the table round. Now fayre damoysele sayd sir launcelot, I see yonder cometh a knyght fast bounden that is a felawe of myne, and broder he is vnto syr gawayne. And att the fyrst begynnynge I promyse yow by the leue of god to resowewe that knyght. But yf his mayster sytte better in the sadel I shal delyuer alle the prysyoners that he hath oute of daunger, for I am sure he hath two bretheren of myne prysyoners with hym. By that tyme that eyther had sam ether, they grypped theyr speres vnto them. Now fayre knyghe sayd syr launcelot, put that wounded knygthe of the hors, and lete hym reste a whyle, and lete vs two preue oure strengthe. For as it is enformed me thou doest and hast done grete despyte and shame vnto knygthes of the round table, and therfor now defende the. And thou be of the table round sayd Turquyne I defye the and alle thy felauership. that is ouermoche sayd, sayd syr launcelot.

And thene they put theyrr speres in the restys, & cam to gyders with her horses as fast as they myght renne. And eyther smote other in myddes of theyre sheldes that bothe theyre horse backes braste vnder them, and the knygthes were bothe astonyed, and as soon as they myghte suoyde theyrre horses, they took there sheldes afore them, and drewe oute her swerdes, and cam to gyder egerly, and eyther gaf other many stronge strokes, for there myght neyder sheldes nor harneis hold theyr strokes. And soo withina whyle they hadde bothe grymly woundes, and bledde passyng greuously. Thus they ferd two houres or mo trasyng and rasyng eyther other where they myght hytte ony bare place. Thenne at the last they were bretheles bothe, and stode lenyng on theyre swerdes. Now felawe sayd syr Turquyne hold thy hand a whyle, and telle me what I shal aske the. Say on. thenne Turquyne sayd thou arte the byggest man that euer I mette with al, and the beste brethed, and lyke on knyxt that I hate aboue al other knyghtes, so be hit that thou be not he I wyl lyghtly accorde with the, & for thy loue I wil deluyuer al the prisoners that I haue that is thre score and foure, soo thou wylt tell me thy name. And thou and I we wyl be felawes to gyders and neuer to fayle the whyle that I lyue. it is wel sayd, sayd syr launce- lot, but sythen hit is soo that I may haue thy frendship, what knyght is he that thou soo hasted aboue al other. Feythfully sayd syr Turquyne his name is syre launcelot du lake, for he slewe my broder syr Caradus at the dolorous toure that was one of the best knyghtes on lyue. And therfore hym I exepte of al knyghtes, for may I ones mete with hym, the one of vs shal make an ende of other I make myn auowe. And for sir launcelots sake I haue slayne an C good knyghtes, and as many I haue maymed al vterly that they myght neuer after helpe them self, and many haue dyed in pryson, and yet haue I thre score and foure, and al shal be deluyuerd so thou wilt telle me thy name, so be it that thou be not syre launcelot.

Now see I wel sayd syre launcelot: that suche a man I myght be I myght haue pees, and suche a man I myghte be, that ther shold be moral warre betwixt vs. And now syr knyght at thy request I wyl that thou wete and knowe that I am Launcelot du lake kynge Bans sone of Benwyck, and uery knyghte of the table round. And now I defye the doo thy best. A sayd syr Turquyne, Launcelot thou art vnto me moost welcom that euere was knyght, for we shal neuer departe tyll the one of vs be dede. And thene they hurtled togyders as two wylye bulles rasshynge and lasshyenge with theyr shekdes and swerdes that somtyme they felle both ouer theyr noses. Thus they fought stylle two houres and more, and neuer wold haue reste, and syr Turquyne gaf syr Launcelot many woudes that all the groude there as they fought was all besperpled with blood.

CA. ix.

Thenne at the last syr Turquyne waxed sore faynte, and gaf somewhat aseck, and bare his shekde full lowe for werynesse. That aspyed syr Launcelot soone, and lepte thenne vpon hym fyersly as a lyon and gate hym by the Bauowre of his helmet, and so he plucked hym downe on his knees. And anone he racyd of his helme, and thenne he smote his necke in sonder. And whan syr Launcelot hadde done this, thenne he yode vnto the damoyesel and sayd to her, da-moysel I am redy to go with yow where that ye wyl haue me, but I haue noo hors. Fayr syr sayd the damoyesel, take ye this wounded knyghtes hors and sende hym in to this manoyr, and commaunde hym for to deluyer all the prysoners. And soo syr Launcelot wente vnto syr Gaherys, and prayed hym not to be agerued for to lene hym his hors. Nay fayre lorde sayd Gaherys, I wyl that ye take my hors atte your owne cômaidentement, for ye haue both saued me and my hors, and this daye I saye ye are the best knyght in the worlde, For ye haue slayne this daye in my syght the myghtyest man and the best knyght except yow that euer I sawe, and fayre syr sayd Gaherys I praye yow telle me your name. Syr my name is syr Launcelot du lake that ought to helpe you of ryght for Kynge Arthurs sake, and in especyall for my lorde syr Gawayns sake your owne dere broder, and whanne that ye come within yonder manoyr, I am sure that ye shal fynde there many knyghtes of the roûde table, for I haue sene many of theyr sheldes that I know on yonder tree. There is syr Kayes sheld, and syr Brandeles sheld and Marhaus sheld, and syr Gal-yndes sheld, and syr Bryan the lystnoye sheld and syr Alydukes sheld with many more that I am not now auyed of, and also my two bretherens sheldes, syre Ector de marys and syr Lyonell, wherfor I praye you grete them al from me, and saye that I bydde them take theyre suche stuffe as they fynde, and that in any wyse my bretheren goo vnto the Courte and abyde me there tyll that I come thyder, for by the feaste of Pentecost I thynke to be there, for as at this tyme I must ryde with this damoyesel for to saue my promesse, and so he departed from syr Gaherys, and Gaherys yede in to the manoyr and there he fonde a yeman porter kepynge there many keyes. And forth with all syr Gaherys threwe the porter ayenst the grounde and toke the keyes fro hym, and hastly he opened the pryson dore, and there he lette out al the prysoners, and euery man loses other of theyr bandes. And whanne they sawe sir Gaherys, they all thanked hym, for they wende by cause he was wounded that he had slayne syr Turquyne. Not soo said Gaherys, hit was syr Launcelot that alewe hym worshipfully wyth his owne handes. I sawe it with mine eyen. And he grete you alle wel, and prayeth yow to haste yow to the Courte, and as vnto sir Lyonell & syr Ector de marys he prayeth you to abyde hym at the Courte. That shal we not doo sayd his bretheren, we wyl fynde hym and we may lyue. Soo shall I said sir Kaye fynde hym or I come at the Courte as I am true Knyghte. Themne al the knyghtes sought the house wher as the armour was, and themne they armd them, & every knyght fonde his own hors and all that belonged vnto hym. And whanne all thys was done, ther came a forester with four horses laden wyth venesone. Anone sir Kay said here is good mete for vs for one meale, for we had not many a daye one good repaste. And so that venesone was rosted, baked, and soden, and so after souper some abode ther al nyghte, but syr Lyonell and syr Ector de marys and syr kay rode after sir Launcelot for to fynde hym if they myghte.

Capitulum x.

Now torne we vnto syre Launcelot that rode with the damoysel in a fayre hyghe waye. syr sayd the damoysel, here by this way hauneth a knyght that destressyd al ladys and gentilywymmen. And at the leest he robbeth them or lyeth by them. What said sir Launcelot is he a thurf & a knyght & a rauysher of wymmen, he doth shame vnto the ordre of knyghthode, and contrary vnto his othe, hit is pyte that he lyueth. But fayr damoysel ye shal ryde on afore your self, and I wylle kepe my self in couerte. And yf that he trouble yow or distresse yow, I shalbe your rescowe and lerne hym to be ruled as a knyghte. Soo the mayde rode on by the way a soft ambelynge paas. And within a whyle cam oute that knyght on horsbak oute of the woode, and his page with hym, & ther he put the damoysel from her hors, and themne she cryed. With that came launcelot as fast as he myghte tyl he came to that knyght, sayenge, O thou fals knyght and traytour vnto knyghthode, who dyd lese the to dystresse ladys and gentilywymmen. Whanne the knyghte saw ye sire launcelot thus rebuk ynge hym, he ansuerd not, but drewe his swerd and rode vs syre launcelot, and syre launcelot threwe his spere fro hym, and drewe ousc his swerd, and strake hym suche a buffet on the helmet that he clafe his heede and neck vs to the throte.

Now hast thou thy payement that long thou hast deserued, that is trouthe sayd the damoysel. For lyke as syr Turquyne watchted to destroye knyghtes, soo dyde this knyght attende to destroye and dystresse ladys damoysels and gentylwymmen, & his name was syre Perys de foreyst sauege. Now damoysel sayde syre launcelot wylle ye ony more seruyse of me. Nay syre she sayd at this tyme, but almighty Jhesu preserve you where someuer ye ryde or goo, for the curyst knyghte thou arte and mekest vs to all ladys and gentyl-wymmen that now lyueth. But one thynge syre knyghte me thynketh ye lacke, ye that are a knyghte wyueles that ye wyl not loue some mayden or gentylwoman, for I coude nouer here say that euere ye loued ony of no maner degree and that is grete pyte, but hit is noisyd that ye loue queene Gueneuer, and that she hath ordeyned by enchaunte-ment that ye shal neuer loue none other, but her, ne none other damoysel ne lady shall reioyse you. Wherfor many in this land of hythe estate and lowe make grete sorowe. Fayre damoysel sayd syr launcelot I maye not warne peple to speke of me what it pleaseth hem. But for to be a wedded man, I thynke hit not, for themne I must couche with her, and leue armes and turnementys, batayls, and aduentures. And as for to say for to take my plesaunce with peramsours that wylle I refuse in pryncypal for drede of god. For knyghtes that ben auenturous or lecherous shal not be happy ne fortunate vs to the werry, for outhere they shalle be ouercome with a sympleyern knyghte than they be hem self. Outher els they shal by vnhappy and her curclynes see better men then they ben hem self.
And soo who that seeth peramsours shalle be vnhappy, and all thyneg is vnhappy that is aboute hem. And soo syre Launcelot and she departed. And themne he rode in a depe forest two dayes and more, and had strayte lodgyng. Soo on the thyrde day he rode ouer a longe brydge, and there starte upon hym sodenly a passyng foule choir, and he smote his hors on the nose that he tormed aboute, & asked hym why he rode ouer that brydge withoute his lycence. Why shold I not ryde this way said syr launcelot, I may not ryde besyde, thou shalt not chease sayd the chorie and lasshyd at hym with a grete clubbe shod with yron. Thenne syre launcelot drewe his swerd and put the stroke abak, and clase his hede vnto the pappys. At the ende of the brydge was a fayre village, & al the people men and wymmen cryed on syre launcelot, and sayd, A wers dede dydest thou neuer for thy self, for thou hast slayn the chiefe porter of oure castel. syr launcelot lete them say what they wold. And streyghte he wente in to the castel. And whanne he cam in to the castel he alygte, and teyed his hors to a rynge on the wall. And there he sawe a fayre grene courte, and thyder he dressyd hym. For thare hym thought was a fayre place to fyghte in. Soo he loked aboute, and sawe moche peple in dores and wyndowes that sayd fayr knyghte thou art vnhappy.

Capitulum xi.

Anone with al cam ther in vpon hym two grete gyaunts wel armed al sauf the hedes with two horryble clubbes in theyr handes. Syre Launcelot put his sheld afore hym and put the stroke awei of the one gyaunt, and with his swerd he clae his hede a sondre. Whan his felaw sawe that, he ran awei as he were wood, for fere of the horryble strokes, & launcelot afer hym with al his myst & smote hym on the sholdar, and clase hym to the nauel. Thenne syre launcelot went in to the hall, and there came afore hym thre score ladys and damoysels, and all kneled vnto hym, and thanked god & hym of their deleyuaunce. For syre sayd they, the mooste party of vs haue ben here this seuen yere their prysoners, and we haue worched al maner of sylke werkes for oure mete, and we are al grete gentyl-wymmen borne, and blesseyd be the tyme knyzte that euer thou be borne. For thou hast done the mooste worship that euer dyd knyght in this world, that wyl we bere recorde and we al pray you to telle vs your name, that we may telle our frendes who deleyuerd vs oute of pryson. Fayre damoysel he sayd, my name is syre launcelot di lake. A syre sayde they al, wel mäyst thou be he, for els mäue your self, as we demed, there myghte neuer knyght haue the better of these two gyants; for many fayre knyghtes haue assayed hit, and here haue ended, and many tymes haue we wyashed after yow, and these two gyants dredde neuer knyghte but you. Now maye ye saye sayd syr launcelot vnto youre frendes how & who hath deuyerd you, and grete them al from me, and yf that I come in ony of your marches, shewe me suche chere as ye haue cause and what tresouer that there in this castel is I gyue it you for a reward for your greasance. And the lorde that is owner of this castel I wold he recyued it as is ryght. Fayre syre saide they, the name of this castel is Tyntygayl, & a duke oughte it somtyme that had wedded fair Igrayn, & after wedded her Utherpendragon, & gate on her Arthur. Wel saide sir launcelot I vnderstande to whome this castel longeth, and soo he departed from them, and bytaughte hem vnto god. And thenne he mounted vpon his hors & rode in to many strauge & wyld countreyees and thorou many waters and valeyes and esyl was he lodged. And at the laste by fortune hym happen ageynst a nyghte to come to a fayre courtelage, & therin he fond an old gentylwoman that lodged hym with good wyl, and there he had good chere for hym and his hors. And whan tymye was his oost brought hym in to a fayre garet ouer the gate to his bedde. There syr Launcelot vaurned hym & sette his harneys by hym, and wente to bed, & anone he felle on slepe. So soone after ther cam one on horsbback, & knocked at the gate in grete haste, and whan syr laun-celot herd this, he arose vp and loked oute at the wynsdowe, & sawe by the mone lyygte thre knyghtes cam rydyng after that one man, and al thre lasched on hym at ones with swerdies, & that one knyxt tourned on hem knyxtly aseyne, and defended hym. Truly saide syr Launcelot yonder one knyzte shal I helpe, for it were shame for me to see thre knyztes on one. And yf he be slayne I am partener of his deth, & ther with he took his harneas, and went out at a wyndowe by a shete doune to the four knyztes, & thenne syr Launcelot sayd on hygne, torne you knyghtes vnto me and leue your fyghtyng with that knyght. And thenne they alle thre lefte syr kay, and torned vnto syr Launcelot, and there beganne grete bataylle, for they alleghte al the, and strake many grete strokes at syr Launcelot, and assayled hym on every syde. Theme syre kay dressid hym for to haue holpen syre Launcelot, nay syre sayd he I wylle none of your helpe, therfor as ye wylle haue my helpe, let me alone with hem. Syre kay for the pleasyre of the knyghte suffred hym for to doo hys wylle, and soo stode on syde. And thenne anon within vi strokes, syre launcelot had stryken hem to the erthe.

And thenne they al thre cryed syre knyghte we yelde vs vnto you as man of myght makeles. As to that said syr laücelot I will not take youre yeldynge vnto me. But so that ye wylle yelde you vnto syr kay the Seneschal on that couenaunt I wyl save your lyues and els not. Fayre knyghte sayd they that were we lothe to doo. For as for syr kay, we chaced hym hyder, and had ouercome hym had not ye ben, therfor to yelde vs vnto hym it were no reson. Wel as to that said laücelot, auyse you wel, for ye may chese whether ye wyll dye or lyue, for and ye be yolden it shal be vnto syr kay. Fayre knyght thenne they sayd in sauynge of oure lyues we wylle doo as thou commandys vs. Thenne shal ye sayd syre launcelot on whytsonday nexte comyng go vnto the courte of kynge Arthur, and there shal ye yelde you vnto queene Gueneuer, and put you al thre in her grace and mercy, and saye that sir kay sente you thyder to be her prysoners. Syre they said it shalbe done by the feythe of oure bodyes, and we ben lyuynde, and there they swore euery knyghte vpon his swerd. And so sir launcelot suffred hem soo to departe. And thenne sir launcelot knocked at the yate with the pomel of his swerd, and with that came his oost, and in they entred sir kay and he. Syre sayd his boost I wende ye had ben in your bedde, so I was, sayd sire launcelot. But I arose and lepte oute atte my wyndowe for to helpe an old flawe of myne. And so whanne they came nyghe the lyghte, sir kay knewe wel that it was sir launcelot, and ther with he kneled doune and thanked hym of al his kyndenesse that he had holpen hym twyes from the deth. Syre he sayd I haue no thynge done but that me ought for to doo, and ye are welcome, and here shal ye repose yow and take your rest. Soo whan sir kay was vnamed, he asked after mete, soo there was mete fette hym, and he ete strongly. And whan he hadde souped they went to theyr beddes and were lodged to gyders in one bedde. On the morne sir Launcelot arose early, and left Sir Kay a sleeping, and Sir Launcelot took Sir Kay's armour and his shield and armed him, and so he went to the stable, and took his horse and took his leave of his host, and so he departed. Thenne soon after arose Sir Kay and myssed Sir Launcelot. And thenne he aspyed that he had his armour and his horse. Now by my fythe I know wel that he wylle greue some of the courte of kyng Arthur. For on hym knyghtes wylle be bold, and deme that it is I, and that wylle begyle them. And by cause of his armour and shelede I am sure I shal ryde in pees. And thenne soon after departed Sir Kay & thanked his host.

Capitulum xii.

Now torne we vnto Sir Launcelot that had ryden long in a grete forest, and at the last he came in to a lowe countray ful of fryre Ryuers and medowes. And afor hym he sawe a longe brydge, and thre paelions stode theron of sylke and sendel of dyuers hewe. And withoute the paelione henge thre whyte sheildes on truncheons of sperys, & grete longe sperys stode vpryght by the paeliones, and at every paeliones dore stode thre fresehe squyers, and soo Sir Launcelot passed by them and spake no wordes. Whan he was past the thre knyghtes sayden hym that hit was the proud kay, he wenet no knyght soo good as he, and the contrary is ofyme preued. By my fythe sayd one of the knyghtes, his name was Sir Gaunter, I wylle ryde after hym, & assaye hym, for alle his pryde, and ye may beholde how that I spede. Soo this knyghtes Sir Gaunter armed hym, and henge his shelede vpoun his sholder, and mounted vpon a grete hors, and gate his sper in his hand, and wallop after Sir Launcelot, and whanne he came nyghe hym, he cryed Abye thou poude knyght Sir kay, for thou shalt not passe quyte. Soo Sir Launcelot torne hym, and eyther feutryd their speres, and came to gyders with alle theyr myghtes, and Sir Gaunters sper brake, but Sir Launcelot smote hym doune hors and man, and whanne Sir Gaunter was at the erthe, his bretheren sayd echone to other yonder knyght is not syre kay, for he is byggar than he. I dare laye my beede sayd Sir Gylnere yonder knyghtes hath slayne syr kay and hath taken his hors and his harneis. Whether it be soo or no sayd syr Raynold the thryd broder, leve vs now goo mounte vpon oure horses and rescowe ourbroder sir Gaunter vpon payne of dethe. We alle shal haue werke ynouz to matche that knyght, for euer me semeth by his persone it is syre Launcelot, or syr Trystram, or syr Pelless the good knyght. Thence anon they toke theyr horses and ouertook syr launcelot, and syre gylmere put forth his spere, and ranne to sir launcelot, and syre launcelot smote hym doune that he lay in a swoune. Syre knyght sayd syr Raynold thou arte a strong man, and as I suppose thou hast slayne my two brethen, for the whiche rasyth my herte sore ageynst the. And yf I myght with my worship I wold not haue a do with yow but nedes I must take parte as they doo. And therfor knyghts he sayd, kepe thy self. And soo they hurld to gyders with alle theyr myghtes, and al to sheuered bothe theyr speres. And thence they drewe her swerdes and lasshyd to gyder egerly. Anoone there with aroos syre Gaüter, and came vnto his broder syre gylmure, and bad hym aryse and helpe we oure broder syr Raynold that yonder merueyllously matched yonder good knyght. There with alle they lepte on theyr horses & hurld vnto syre launcelot. And whanne he sawe them come, he smote a sore stroke vnto syr Raynold that he felle of his hors to the ground. And thence he stroke to the other two brethen, and at two strokes he strake them doune to the erthe. With that sir Raynold beganne to starte vp with his heed al blody, and came streyte vnto syre launcelot. Now late be sayd sir launcelot, I was not ferre from the whan thou were maade knyght sir Raynold, and also I knowe thou arte a good knyght, and lothe I were te see the. Gramercy sayd syr raynold as for your goodnes.
And I dare saye as for me and my brethen we wyl not be lothe to yelde vs vnto yow, with that we knewe youre name, for wel we knowe ye are not sire kay. As for that be it as it be maye, for ye shal yelde yow vnto dame gweneuer, and loke that ye be with her on whyteonday and yelde you vnto her as prysoners, and saye that syre kay sente yow vnto her. Thence they swore hit shold be done, and so passed forthe sire launcelot, and echome of the brethen halpe other as wel as they myght.
Capitulum xiii.

Soo sir launcelot rode in to a depe forest, and ther by in a slade, he sawe four knyghtes houyng vnder an oke, and they were of Arthurs courte, one was sir Sagramour le desyrus and Ector de marys, and sir Gawyn and sir Uwayne. Anone as these four knyghtes had aspyed sir Launcelot they wend by his armes it hadde ben sir kay. Now by my feythe sayd sir Sagramour, I wylle preue sir kayes myghte, & gate his spere in his hand, and came toward sir launcelot. Ther with sir launcelot was ware and knewe hym wel, and feutryd his spere aseyust hym, and smote syre Sagramore so sore that hors and man felle bothe to the erthe. Lo my felaus sayd he yonder ye may see what a buffet he hath, that knyst is moche bygger than euer was syre kay. Now shal ye see what I may doo to hym. Soo syr Ector gate his spere in his hand and walloppe toward syre Launcelot, and syre Launcelot smote hym thorous the sheld & sholder that man and hors went to the erthe, and euer his spere held. By my feythe sayd sir Uwayne yonder is a strong knyghte, and I am sure he hath slayne syr kay. And I see by his grete strengthe it wyll be hard to matche hym. And there with al syre Uwayne gate his spere in his hand and rode toward syre Launcelot, and syr launcelot knewe hym wel, and soo he mette hym on the playne, & gafe hym suche a buffette that he was astonyed, that longe he wyxt not where he was. Now see I wel sayd syre gawayne I must encoitre with that knyst. Thennhe he dressid he his sheld and gate a good spere in his hand, and syre launcelot knewe hym wel, and thenne they lete renne theyr horses with all theyr myghtes, and euyther knyght smote other in myddes of the sheld. But syre gawayne spere to brast, and syre launcelot charged so sore vpon hym that his hors reuersed vp so doune. And moche sorowe he syd gawayne to auoyde his hors, and so syre launcelot passed on a paws and smylyed and said god gyue hym ioye that this spere made, for there came neuer a better in my hand. Thenne the four knyghtes wente echenoe to other and comforted eche other. What saye ye by this gest sayd syre Gawayne, that one spere hath feld vs al foure, we commaunde hym vnto the deuyl they sayd al, for he is a man of grete myght. ye may wel saye it, sayd syre gawayne, that he is a man of myght, for I dare lay my hede it is syre Launcelot, I knowe it by his rydyng. Lete hym goo sayd syre Gawysyn, for whan we come to the courte than shal we weye, and thenne had they moche sorowe to gete theyer horses ageyne.

Now leue we there & speke of syr Launcelot that rode a grete whyle in a depe forest where he saw a black brachet sekyng in maner as it had ben in the feaute of an hurt dere. And ther with he rode after the brachet and he sawe lye on the ground a large feaute of blood. And thenne syre launcelot rode after. And euer the Brachet loked behynd her, and soo she wente thorou a grete mreyse, and euer syre launcelot folowed. And thenne was he ware of an old manyor, and thyer ranne the brachet and soo ouer the brydge. Soo syre launcelot rode ouer that brydge that was old and feble, and whan he cam in myddes of a grete halle ther he sawe lye a dede knyght that was a semely man, and that brachet lycked his woundes, and there with al came oute a lady wepyng & wryn glyng her handes. And thenne she sayd, O knyghte to moche sorowe hast thou broughte me. Why saye ye soo sayd syr launcelot, I dyd neuer this knyghte no harme, for hyther by feaute of blood this Brachet broughte me. And therfor fayre lady be not displease with me, for I am ful sore agreaued of your greusance. Truly syre she sayd I trowe hit be not ye that hath slayne my husband, for he that dyd that dede is sore wounded, & he is neuer lyckly to recouer, that shal I ensure hym. What was your husbandes name sayd syre launcelot. Syr sayd she, his name was called syre Gylibert the bastard, one of the best knyghtes of the world, and he that hath slayne hym I knowe not his name. Now god sende you better conforte sayd syre launcelot, and soo he departed and wente in to the forest ageyne; and there he met with a damoyse, the whiche knewe hym wel, and she sayd on loude wel be ye fond my lord.
And now I requyre the on thy knyghthode helpe my brother that is sore wounded, and neuer stynteth bledyng, for this day he fought with syre gilbert the bastard & slewe hym in playn bataylle, and there was my brother sore wounded, and there is a lady a sorceresse that duelleth in a castel here besyde, and this day she told me, my broders woundes shold neuer be hole tyl I coude fynde a knyght wold goo in to the chappel peryllous, & ther he shold fynde a swerd and a blydy clothe that the wounded knyght was lapped in, and a pype of that clothe & swerd shold hele my broders woundes so thay his woundes were serched with the swerde and the clothe. This is a merueyllous thyng syd syre launcelot, but what is your broders name. Syre she syd, his name was syre Melyot de logurs. that me repenteth said syre launcelott, for he is a felawe of the table round, and to his helpe I wylle doo my power. Themne syre syd she, folowe euyn this hyhe waye, and it wyl brynge you vnto the chappel peryllous. And here I shalle abyde tyl god send you here ageyne, and but you spede I knowe no knyhte lyuyng that may encheue that adventure.

Ryght soo syr Launcelot departed. And whan he cam vnto the chappel peryllous, he alyghte doune, and typad his hors vnto a lytyl gate, and as soo as he was within the chirche yard, he sawe on the front of the chappel many fayre ryche sheildes turned vp so doune, and many of the sheildes syre launcelot had sene knyghtes bere before hand. Wyth that he sawe by hym there stande a xxx greete knyghtes more by a yarde than ony man that euer he had sene, and all tho grened and gaasted at syre launcelot. And whan he sawe theyr countenaunce he dred hym sore, and soo putte his sheilde afore hym, and toke his swerd redy in his hand redy vnto bataylle, and they were al armed in black harnes redy with her sheildes and her swerdes drawen. And whan syr Launcelot wold haue gone thorou oute them, they acaternyd on euery syde of hym, and gaf hym the way, and ther with he waxed al bold, and entred in to the chappel, and themne he sawe no lyght, but a dymme lamp brenynge, and themne was he ware of a cors hyled with a clothe of sylke. Themne syre Launcelot stouped doune, and cutte a pyece away of that clothe, and thenne it ferd vnder hym as the erthe had quaked a lytel ther with al he feryd. And thenne he sawe a fayre swerd lye by the dede knyghte, and that he gate in his hand and hyed hym oute of the chapel. Anone as euer he was in the chappel yarde, alle the knyghtes spak to hym with a grymly voys, and sayd knyghte syr launcelot leye that swerd from the or ellys thou shalt dye. Whether that I lyue or dye sayd syr launcelot with noo grete word gete ye hit ageyne, therfor fyghte for it and ye lyst. Themne ryght soo he passed thorou out them, and by yonde the chappel yarde ther mette hym a fayre damoysel & sayd syr launcelot leue that swerd behynde the, or thou wilt dye for it. I leue it not sayd syr launcelot for no treatys. No sayd she and thou dydest loue that swerd, quene gweneuer shold thou neuer see, themne were I a foole and I wold leue this swerd sayd launcelot. Now gentyl knyghte sayde the damoysel, I requyre the to kyse me but ones. Nay sayd syr launcelot that god me forbode. Wel syr sayd she, and thou haddest kyssed me, thy lyf dayes had ben done, but now alas she said I haue loste al my labour, for I ordeyned this chappel for thy sake, and for syre gawayne. And ones I had syr Gawayne within me, and at that tymte he foughte with that knyghte that lyeth there dede in yonder chappel syre Glylbert the bastard. and at that tymte he smote the lyfte hand of of sir Gylbert the bastard. And syre Launcelot now I telle the, I haue loued the this seuen yere, but there may no woman haue thy loue but quene Gweneuer. But sythen I maye not rejoyce the to haue thy body on lyue I had kepte no more ioye in this world, but to haue thy body dede. Thenne wold I haue baumed hit and serued hit, and soo haue kepte it my lyfe dayes, and dayly I shold haue clypped the, and kyssed the in despyte of Quene Gweneuer. ye saye wel sayd syr launcelot, Jhesu preserue me from your substyle craftes. And ther with al he took his hors and soo departed from her. And as the book sayth whan syr launcelot was departed she took suche sorou that she dyed within a fourten nyghte, and her name was Hellawes the sorresse lady of the castel Nygramous.
Anone syre launcelot mette with the damoyssel syre Melyotis syster. And when she sawe hym she clapped her handes, and wepte for ioye. And thenne they rode vnto a castel there by where lay syr Melyot. And anone as syre launcelot sawe hym, he knewe hym, but he was passyng pale as the erthe for bledyng. When syre Melyot sawe syre launcelot he kneeled vpon his knees and cryed on hyghe, O lord syr launcelot helpe me. Anone syre launcelot lepte vnto hym and touched his woundes with syr Gylbertes swerde. And thenne he wyped his woundes with a part of the blody clothe that sir gylbert was wrapped in, and anon an holier man in his lyf was he neuer. And thenne ther was grete ioye bytwene hem, and they made syr launcelot alle the chere that they myghte, and soo on the morne syre launcelot toke his leue, and badde syre Melyot hye hym to the courtes of my lord Arthur, for it draweth nyhe to the feest of pentecoste, and there by the grace of god ye shal fynde me, and therwith they departed.

And soo syre Launcelot rode thorou many straunge countreyes ouer marys and valeyes tyl by fortune he came to a fayre castel, and as he paste beyonde the castel, hym thought he herde two belys rynge. And thenne was he ware of a Faucon came fleynge ouer his hed toward an hyghe elme, and longe lunys aboute her feet, and she fleye vnto the elme to take her perch, the lunys ouer cast aboute a bough. And whanne she wold hauve taken her flyghte, she henge by the legges fast, and syre launcelot sawe how he henge, and byheld the fayre faucon pergygot, & he was sory for her. The meane whyle came a lady oute of the castel and cryed on hyghe O launcelot launcelot as thou arte flor of alle knyghtes helpe me to gete my hauke, for and my hauke be lost, my lord wyl destroye me, for I kepte the hauke and she slypped from me, and yf my lord my husband wete hit, he is soo hasty that he wyll alee me. What is your lorde name sayd sir Launcelot, sir she said his name is sire Phelot a knyghte that longeth vnto the kyng of Northgalys. wel fayre lady syn that ye knowe my name and require me of knygthode to helpe yow I wylle doo what I may to gete your hauke, and yet god knoweth I am an ylle climer and the tree is passynge hyghe, and fewe bowes to helpe me with alle. And ther with sir launcelot alyzte and teyed his hors to the same tree, and prayd the lady to vnarme hym. And soo whan he was vnarmed, he put of alle his clothes vnto his sherte and breche, and with myghte & force he clamme vp to the fauncon, and teyed the lunys to a grete rotten boyshe, and threwe the hauke doune and it with alle. Anone the lady gate the hauke in her hand, and there with al came outhe syre phelot outhe of the greuys sodenly, that was her husband al armed, and with his naked swerd in his hand and sayd O knyghte launcelot now haue I fonde the as I wold and stode at the bole of the tree to slee hym. A lady sayd syre Launcelot why haue ye bytrayed me. She hath done sayd syre Phelot but as I commaundd her, and therfor ther nys none other boote but thyne houre is come that thou muste dye. That were shame vnto the sayd syr launcelot thou an armed knygthte to slee a naked man by treason, thou getest none other grace sayd syre phelot and therfor helpe thy self and thou canst. Truly sayde syre launcelot that shal be thy shame, but syn thou wylt doo none other, take myn harneys with the and hange my swerde vpon a bough that I maye gete hit, & thenne doo thy best to slee me and thou canst. Nay nay said sir Phelot, for I knowe the better than thou wensem, therfor thou getest no wepen and I may kepe you ther fro. Alas said sir launcelot that euuer a knyghte shold dye wopenles. And ther with he wayted aboue hym and vnder hym, and ouer his hede be sawe a rownseyk a bygge bough leuelles, and ther with he brake it of by the body. And thenne he came lower & wayted how his owne hors stode, and sodenly he lepte on the fether syde of the hors froward the knyghte. And thenne sir phelot lashed at hym egerly weynge to haue slayne hym. But syr Launcelot putte aweye the stroke with the rownseyk, and ther with he smote hym on the one syde of the hede that he felle doune in a swoune to the ground. Soo thenne syre launcelot took his swerd outhe of his hand and stroke his neck fro the body. Thenne cryed the lady, Alas why hast thou slayne my husband, I am not causer sayd syre launcelot, for with falshede ye wold haue had slayne me with treson, and now it is fallen on you bothe. And thence she sough as though she wold dye. And ther with al syre launclot gate al his armour as wel as he myght, and put hit vpon hym for drede of more resorte, for he drede that the knytnes castel was soo nygh. And soo as soon as he myght he took his hors and departed and thanked god that he had escapd that adventure.

Capitulum xvii.

Soo syre launcelot rode many wylde wayes thorow out mateyes and many wylde wayes. And as he rode in a valey he sawe a knyght chacynge a lady with a naked swerd to haue slayn her. And by fortune as this knynte shold haue slayne thys lady she cryed on syr Launcelot and prayd hym to rescowe her. When syre launcelot sawe that meschye; he took his hors and rode bytwene them, sayeng knynte fy for shame, why wolt thou slee this lady, thou doet shame vnto the and alle knyghtes. What haste thou to doo betwyx me & my wyf, sayd the knyght. I wylle slee her maugre thy hede, that shalle ye not sayd syr launcelot, for rather we two wylle haue addo to gyders. Syr Launcelot sayd the knyght thow doest not thy part, for this lady hath bytrayed me, hit is not so sayd the lady, truly he sayth wronge on me. And for by cause I loue and cheryshe my cosyn germayne, he is jalous betwixe hym and me. And as I shalle ansuer to god there was neuer synne betwyxvs. But sir sayd the lady as thou arte called the worshipfulst knyghte of the world I requyre the of true knyshode kepe me and saue me. For what someuer ye saye he wyl slee me, for he is withoute mercy, haue ye no doubte sayd launcelot it shal not lye in his power. Syr sayd the knyghte in your synhte I wyl be ruled as ye wylle haue me. And soo sir laun-celot rode on the one syde and she on the other, he had not ryden but a whyle, but the knyghte badd syr Launcelot torne hym and loke behynde hym, and sayde syre yonder come men of arnes after vs rydynge. And soo sir launclot torne hym and thoughte no treason, and there wyth was the knyghte and the lady on one syde, sodenly he swopped of his ladyes hede. And whan syr Launcelot hadde aspyed hym what he had done, he sayd and called hym traytours thu hast shamed me for euer, and sodenly sir launcelot alyste of his hors and pulled oute hys swerd to slee hym, and there with al he felle flat to the erthe, and grypped sir launcelot by the thyes and cryed mercy. Fy on the sayd sir launcelot thou shameful knyght thou mayst haue no mercy, and therfor aryse and fyghte with me. nay sayde the knyghte I wyl neuer aryse tyl ye graunte me mercy. Now wyl I profer the fayr said launcelot, I wyl vnarme me vnto my sherte, and I wylle haue nothyng vpon me, but my sherte and my swerd and my hand. And yf thou canst slee me, quyte be thou for euer, nay sir said Pedyuere that wille I neuer. wel said sir Launcelott take this lady and the hede, and bere it vpon the, and here shalt thou swere vpon my swerd to bere it alwayes vpon thy back and neuer to reste tyl thou come to queene Gueneuer. Syre sayd he that wylle I doo by the feithe of my body. Now said launcelot tell me what is your name, sir my name is Pedyuere. In a shameful houre were thou borne said launcelot. Soo Pedyuere departed with the dede lady and the hede, and foud the queene with kynges Arthur at Winchester, and there he told alle the trouthe. Syre knyzt said the queene this is an horryble dede and a shameful, and a grete rebuke vnto sire launcelott. But not withstandynge his worship is not knownen in many dyuerse countreyes, but this shalle I gyue you in penaunce, make ye as goud skyfte as ye can ye shal bere this lady with you on horsbak vnto the pope of Rome, and of hym receyue your penaunce for your foule dedes, and ye shalle neuer reste one nyghthe there as ye doo another, and ye goo to ony bedde the dede body shal lye with you. this othe, there he made and soo departed. And as it telleth in the frensise book, whan he cam to Rome, the pope basde hym goo ageyne vnto queene Gueneuer and in Rome was his lady beryed by the popes commaundement. And after this sir Pedyuere felle to grete goodness, & was an holy man and an heremyte.
Capitulum xviii.

Now tome we vnto sir launcelot du lake that came home twodayes afofe the feast of Pentecost, and the kyng and alle the courte were passyng payne of his comynge. And whanne sire Gawayne, sir Uwayne, sire Sagramore, sir Ector de marys sawe sire Launcelot in Kayes armour, thenne they wist wel it was be that smote hem doune al with one spere. Thenne there was laughynge and amylyng amonge them, and euer now and now came alle the Knyghtes home that sir Turquyn hadde prysoners and they alle honoured and worshipped syre launcelot. Whanne sire Gaherys herd them speke, he said, I sawe alle the bataille from the begynnyng to the endynge, and there he told kyng Arthur alle how it was and how syre Tur-quyn was the strongest knyghte that euer he sawe excepte syre laun-celot, there were many knyghtes bare hym record nyghe thre score.
Thenne sire kay told the kyng, how syr launcelot had rescowed hym whan he shold haue ben slayne, and how he made the knyghtes yelde hym to me, and not to hym. And there they were al thre, and bare record, and by Jhesu said syr kay by cause syr launcelot took my harneis and lefte me his, I rode in good pees, and no man wold haue adoo with me. Anone there with alle ther came the thre knyghtes that fought with syre launcelot at the longe brydge. And there they yelded hem vnto syr kay, and syr kay forsoke hym and said he foughte neuer with hym, but I shall esse your herte said: sir kay, yonder is syr launcelot that ouercam you. Whan they wyst that, they were glad. And thenne syr Melyot de logrys came home, and told the kynge how syr launcelot had saued hym fro the dethe, and all his dedes were knowen how foure queenes sorceresses had hym in pryson, and how he was deleyuerd by kyng Bagdemagus dochter.
Also there were told alle the grete dedes of armes that syr launcelot dyd betwixe the two kynges, that is for to saye the kynges of north-gyalys and kyng Bagdemagus. Alle the trouthe syr Galantynte dyd telle, and synre Mador de la porte and synre Mordred, for they were at that same turnement. Thenne cam in the lady that knewe syr launcelot whan that he wounded syr Bellyus at the panelione. And there atte request of syr launcelot syr Bellyus was made knyghte of the round table.

And soo at that tyme sir launcelot had the grettest name of ony knyghte of the world, and most he was honoured of hybe and lowe.

Explicit the noble tale of syr Launcelot du lake whiche is the bi book. Here foloweth the tale of syr Gareth of Gerneoeg that was called Beaumagus by syr Kay, and is the seuenthe book.
Capitulum primum.

HAN Arthur held his round table moost plenour, it fortuned that he commanded that the hyhe feest of Pentecost shold be holden at a cyte and a Castel the whiche in tho dayes was called kynke kenadonne vpon the sondes that marched nyghe walys. Soo euuer the kynge hadde a custom that at the feest of Pentecost in especyal afore other feestes in the yere he wold not goo that daye to mete vntyl he had herd or sene of a grete merueyll. And for that custome alle maner of straunge adventures came before Arthur as at that feest before alle other feestes. And soo sire Gawayne a lytyl to fore none of the daye of Pentecost aspyed att a wyndowe thre men vpon horsbak and a dwarf on foote, and soo the thre men alighte and the dwarf kepte their horses, and one of the thre men was hyber than the other tweyne by a foote and an half. Thenne sir Gawayne wente vnto the kynge and sayd, sire go to your mete, for here at the hande comen straunge aduentures. So Arthur wente vnto his mete with many other kynges. And there were all the knyghtes of the round table only tho that were preomers or slayn at a recountre, thence at the hyhe feest euermore they shold be fulfilled the hole nombre of an C and fyfty, for thenne was the round table fully complisshed. Ryght soo cam in to the halle two men wel bisene and rychely, and vpon their sholders there lened the goodlyest yong man & the fairest that euer they al sawe, & he was large and long and brode in the sholders & wel vysaged, and the fayrest and the largest handed that euer man sawe, but he serd as though he myght not goo nor bere hym self, but yf he lened vpon their sholders. Anon as Arthur sawe hym there was made pees & rome, & ryght so they yede with hym vnto the hyghe deyse without sayeng of ony wordes. Thence this moche yong man pulled hym a bak and easely stretched vp streyghte, sayeng kynge Arthur god you blesse and al your fair felauship, and in especial the felauship of the table rounde. And for thys cause I am come hyder to praye you and requyre you to gyue me thre yeftes, and they shalle not be vnreasonably asked, but that ye may worshipfully and honorably graunte hem me, and to you no grete hurte nor lose. And the fyrst done and gyfte I wil aske now, and the other two yeftes I wylle aske this daye twelue moneth, where someuer ye hold your hyghe feest. Now aske sayd Arthur, and ye shalle haue your askyng.

Now syre this is my petycyon for thys feest, that ye wylle gyue me mete and drynke suffycyantly for this twelue moneth, and at that day I wylle aske myn other two yeftes.

My fayr sone sayd Arthur aske better I counecille the for this is but a symple askynge, for my herte geneth me to the gretely that thou arte come of men of worship, and gretely my consaute fayleth me, but thou shalt preue a man of ryghte grete worship. Syre he sayd, ther of be as it be may I haue asked that I wylle aske. Wel sayd the kynge ye shal haue mete & drynke ynouz, I neuer deffended y' none, nother my frende ne my foo. But what is thy name I wold wete, I can not telle you sayd he, that is merueylle sayd the kynge, that thou knowest not thy name, and thou arte the goodlyest yong man one that euer I sawe. Thenne the kyng be-tooke hym to sir kay the steward, and charged hym that he shold gyue hym of al maner of metes and drynkes of the best, and also that he hadde al maner of fyndynge as though he were a lorde sone, that shal lytel nede sayd syr kay to doo suche cost vpon hym. For I dare vndertake he is a vlayne borne, and neuer will make man, for and he had come of gentylmen he wold haue axed of you hors and armour, but suche as he is so he asketh. And sythen he hath no name, I shall yeue hym a name that shal be Beaumayns that is fayre handes, and in to the kechen I shalle brynge hym, and there he shalle haue fatte broweys euer day y' he shall be as fatte by the twelue monethes ende as a porke bog. ryght soo the two men depaerted and belefte hym to syr kay, that scorned hym and mocked hym.

Ca. ii.

There at was sir Gawyn wroth, & in especyal sir launcelot bad sir kay leue his mockynge, for I dare laye my hede he shall preue a man of grete worship. lete be, said sir kay, it may not be by no reason, for as he is, so he hath asked. Beware said syre Launcelot, so ye gafe the good knyzt Brewnor syre Dynadamys broder a name, and ye called hym la cote male tayle, and that tourned you to anger after ward. As for that sayd syr kay this shall neuer preue none suche. For syr Brewnor desyre desyreth worship and thydesyreth breed & drynke, & brothe, vpon payne of my lyf he was fostred vp in some abbay, and how someuer it was they fayled mete and drynke, and soo hyther he is come for his sustenaunce. And soo syre kay badde gete hym a place and sytte doune to mete, soo Beaumayns wente to the halle dore, and sette hym doune amongeth boyes and laddys, & there he ete sadly. And thenne syre launcelot after mete badde hym come to his chamber. And there he shold haue mete and drynke ynough. And soo dyd syre Gawayne, but he refussed hem al, he wold doo none other, but as syr kay commaund hym for no profer. But as touchynge syre Gawayn he hadde reson to profer hym lodgyng mete and drynke, for that profer came of his blood, for he was nere kynne to hym than he wyst. But that as syre launcelot dyd was of his grete gentylnes and curtosye. Soo thus he was putte in to the kechyn and laye nyghtly as the boyes of the kechen dyd. And soo he endured alle that twelwe moneth, and neuer displeasayd man nor chylde, but alwayes he was meke & mylde. But euer whanne that he sawe ony Justynge of knyghtes, that wold he see and he myght. And euer syre launcelot wold gyue hym gold to spende and clothes, and soo dyd syre Gawayne, and where there were ony maystryes done, there atte wold he be, and there myghte none cast barre nor stone to hym by two yerdys. Thenne wold syre kay saye how lyketh yow my boye of the kechyn, soo it past on tyl the feest of Whytsontyde. And at that tyme the kynge helde hit att Carlyon in the moost royallest wyse that myghte be, lyke as he dyd yerly.

But the Kynge wold no mete ete rpon the Whytsunday vntyl he herd some adventures. Thenne cam ther a squyer to the Kyng, and said, syre ye maye goo to your mete, for here cometh a damoysel with somme straunge adventures. thenne was the Kynge gladde and sette hym doune. Ryghte soo ther came a damoysel in to the halle and salewed the Kynge and prayd hym of socour, for whome sayd the Kynge, what is the adventure. Syre she sayd I haue a lady of grete worship and renowne, and she is byseged with a tyraunte so that she may not oute of her castel. And by causse here are callyd the noblest knyghtes of the world, I come to you to praye you of socour. What heteth your lady and where dwelleth she, & who is he, & what is his name that hath byseged her. syre kyng she saide, as for my ladyes name that shall not ye knowe for me as at this tyme, but I lete you wete she is a lady of grete worship and of grete landes. And as for the tyraunt that byseygeth her and destroiyeth her landes he is called the rede knyght of the rede laundes. I knowe hym not sayd the kynge. Syre sayd syre Gawayne, I knowe hym wel for he is one of the perilloust knyghtes of the world, men saye that he hath seuen mennyys strengthe, and from hym I escaped ones ful hard, with my lyf. Fayre damoysel sayd the kynge there ben knyghtes here wolde doo her power for to rescowe your lady, but by causse ye wylle not telle her name nor where she dwelleth, therfor none of my knyghtes that here be now shal goo with yow by my wylle, thenne must I speke further sayd the damoysel.

Wyth these wordes came before the kyng Beumayns whyle the damoysel was ther, & thus he said syr Kyng god thanke you I haue ben this xii monethe in your kechyn and haue hadde my ful sustenancie and now I will aske my two yeftes that ben behynde. Aske vpon my peryl said the kyng. Syre this shal be my two gyftes, fyrist that ye wil graunte me to haue this aduenture of the damoysel, for hit belongeth vnto me, thou shalt haue hit sayd the kyng I graunte it the, thence syr this is the other yeft, that ye shal bydde Launcelot du lake to make me knyxt for of hym I wil be made knyght and els of none. And whanne I am paste I praye yow lete hym ryde after me and make me Knyght, when I requyre hym. Al this shal be done sayd the Kyng. Fy on the sayde the damoysel, shalle I haue none but one that is your kechyn page, thence was she wrothe and toke her hors and departed.

And with that there cam one to Beumayns and told hym his hors and armour was come for hym, and there was the dwarff come with all thyng that hym neded in the rychest maner, ther at al the court had moche mervuell fro whens cam al y'gere. Soo whanne he was armed there was none but fewe soo goodely a man as he was, and ryght soo as he came in to the halle and took his leue of kyng Arthur & sir Gawain & syr launcelot, and prayed that he wolde hythe after hym, and soo departed and rode after the damoysel.

But there wente many after to behold how wel he was horseed and trapped in clothe of gold, but he had neyther sheld nor sperre. Thenne syr kay sayd al open in the halle I wylle ryde after my boye in the kechyn to wete, whether he wylle knowe me for his better. Said syr launcelot and sir gawayn yet abyde at home. So syr kay made hym redy and took his hors and his sperre and rode after hym. And ryghte as Beumayns ouertooke the damoysel, ryghte soo cam syre Kay & sayd Beumayns what syre knowe ye not me. Thenne he turned his hors, and knewe hit was sir kay, that had done hym alle the despyte as ye haue herde afore, ye sayd beumayns I knowe yow for an vngentyl knyghte of the courte, and therfore beware of me.
There with syre kay putte his spere in the reyste, and ranne streyghte vpon hym, and beumayns cam as fast vpon hym with his swerd in his hand, and soo he putte awey his spere with his swerd and with a soyne thrested hym thorou the syde, that syr kay felle doune as he had ben deade, & he alght doune and took sir kayes shelde and his spere, and starte vpon his owne hors and rode his waye. Al that sawe syr launcelot and soo dyd the damoysel. And thenne he badde his dwarf starte vpon sir kayes horns, and soo he dyd. by that syre Launcelot was come, thenne he profered sir launcelot to Juste, and eyther made hem redy, and they came to gyder soo fyrckly that eyther bare doune other to the erthe, and sore were they brysed.
Thenne sir launcelot arose and halpe hym fro his hors. And thenne beumayns threwes his sheld from hym, and profered to fyghte with sir launcelot on foote, and soo they rashed to gyders lyke borys tracynge, racynge and foyynge to the mountenaunce of an houre, and syre launcelot felte hym soo bygge that he mercuylled of his strengthe, for he fought more lyker a gauent then a knyght, and that his fyghtynge was durable and pasynde perilous. For syr launcelot had so moche adoo with hym that he dred hym self to be shamed, and sayd Beumayns fyghte not so sore, youre quarel and myn is not soo grete but we may leue of. Truly that is trouthe sayd Beumayns, but it doth me good to fele your myght, and yet my lord I shewed not the vterauence.

Capitulum quintum.

In goddes name sayd syr launcelot, for I promyse you by the feythe of my body I had as moche to doo as I myght to saue my self fro you vnshamed, and therfore haue ye no doubt of none erthely knyghte. Hope ye so that I maye ony whyle stand a proud knyght sayd Beumayns, ye sayd Launcelot, doo as ye haue done, and I shal be your waraunt. Thenne I praye you sayd Beaumains yeue me the ordre of knyghthode, thenne must ye telle me your name sayd launcelot, and of what kynne ye be borne. Syr soo that ye wyle not discover me I shal sayd Beaumains, nay sayd syre launcelot, and that I promyse yow by the feithe of my body, vntyl hit be openly knownen. Thenne syr he sayd my name is Garret and broder vnto syr Gawayne of fader and moder. A syr said Launcelot I am more gladder of you than I was. For euer me thouste ye shold be of grete blood, and that ye cam not to the courte neyther for mete ne for drynke. And thenne sire Launcelot gaf hym thordre of knyghthode, and thenne sire Garret prayd hym for to deprete and lete hym goo. Soo syre launcelot departed from hym and came to syre kay and maade hym to be born home vpon his sheldre, and so he was helyd hard with the lyf, and al men scorned syr kay, and in especyal sir Gawayne and syre launcelot sayd it was not his parte to rebuke no yonge man, for ful lytel knewe he of what byrth he is comen, and for what cause he came to this courte, and soo we leue syr kay and torne we vnto Beaumains. Whanne he had ouertaken the damoysele, anone she sayd what dost thou here, thou stynkest al of the kechyn, thy clothes ben bawdy of the grece and talowe that thou gaynest in kyng Arthurs kechyn, wenest thou sayd she that I alowe the for yonder knyzt that thou kyllest. Nay truly, for thou slewest hym vnhappely and cowardly, therfor torne ageyn bawdy kechyn page, I knowe the wel, for syre kay named the Beaumains. What arte thou but a luske and a torner of broches and a ladyl vessher. Damoysele sayd Beaumains saye to me what ye wyle, I wyle not goo from you what someuer ye say, for I haue vndertake to kyng Arthur for to acheue your aduenture, and so shal I fynyshe it to the ende, eyther I shal dye therfore. Fy on the kechyn knaue wolt thou fynyshe myn aduenture, thou shalt anone be met with al, that thou woldest not for alle the brothe that euer thou soupest ones loke hym in the face. I shal asayse sayd Beaumains. Soo thus as they rode in the woode, ther came a man fleynge al that euer he myghte. Whether wolt thou sayd Beaumains. O lord he said, helpe me, for here by in a slade are syxe theues that haue taken my lord and bounde hym, soo I am aferd lest they wyl sle hym. Brynge
The thunders said Beaumayns, and soo they rode to gyders vntyl they came there as was the knyghte bouneden, and thenne he rode vnto hem, and strake one vnto the dethe, and thenne an other, and at the thryd stroke he slewe the thyrddde theef, and thenne the other thre fledde. And he rode after hem, and he ouertook hem, and thenne tho thre theues turned ageyne and assayled Beaumayns hard, but at the last he slewe them, & retorned and vabounde the knyghte. And the knyght thanked hym, and prayd hym to ryde with hym to his castel there a lytel besyde, and he shold worshipfully rewarde hym for his good dedes. Syr sayd Beaumayns I wille no reward haue, I was this day made knygthe of noble syr launcelot, and therfor I wylle no reward haue, but god rewarde me. And also I must folowe this damoysel. And whan he came nyghe her she bad hym ryde fro her, for thou smellyst al of the kechyn. Wenas thou that I haue joye of the, for al this dede that thou hast done nys but myshappen the. But thou shalt see a syghte shal make the torne aseyne and that lyghtly. Thenne the same knyght whiche was rescowed of the theues rode after that damosel and prayed her to lodge with hym alle that nyghte. And by cause it was nere nyght, the damoysel rode with hym to his castel, and there they had grete chere, and at souper the knyght sat syr Beaumayns afore the damosel. Fy fy sayd syr knyghte ye are vncurtoys to sette a kechyn page afore me hym bysemeth better to styczke a swyn e then to sytte afore a damosel of hybe parage, thenne the knyght was aseamed atte her wordes, and took hym vp, and sette hym at a syde bord, and sette hym self afore hym, and soo al that nyght they had good chere and mery reste.

And on the morne the damosel & he took their leue & thanked the knyght, and soo departed, and rode on her way, vntyl they came to a grete forest. And there was a grete ryuer and but one passage, and ther were redy two knygthes on the fether syde to lette them the passage, What saist thou sayd the damosel, wylte thou matche yonder knygthes or torne aseyne. Nay sayd syr Beaumayns I wyl not torne ageyn and they were syxe mo. And ther with al he rasshyd in to the water, and in myyses of the water eyther brake their spere vpon other to their handes, and thenne they drewe their swerdes, and smote egerly at other. And at the last syr Beaumayns smote the other vpon the helme that his hede stonyed, and there with alle he felle doune in the water, and there was he drowned. And theie he sporyd his hors vpon the londe, where the other knyghte felle vpon hym, and brake his spere, and soo they drewe theyr swerdes, and foughte longe to gyders.

At the laste syre Beaumayns clafe his helme and his heede doune to the sholders, and soo he rode vnto the damoyesel & bad her ryde forth on her way. Allas she sayd that euer a kechen page shold haue that fortune to destreyde suche two dousty knyghtes, thou wenest thou hast done doughtely that is not soo. For the fyrste knyghte his hors stumbled, and there he was drowned in the water, and neuer it was by thy force, nor by thy myght. And the last knyghte by myshap thou camyst behynde hym and myshappely thou slewe hym. Damoyesel sayd Beaumayns ye maye saye what ye wyl, but with whom someuer I haue a doo with al I truste to god to serue hym or he departe. And therfor I recke not what ye say soo that I may wynne youre lady. Fy fy foule kechen knaue thou shalt see knyghtes that shal abate thy boost. Fayre damoyesel gyue me goodly langage, and thenne my care is past, for what knyghtes someuer they be, I care not ne I doubt hem not. Also sayd she I saye it for thyne suayle, yet mayst thou torne ageyne with thy worship, for and thou folowe me, thou arte but slayne, for I see alle that euer thou dosta is but by mysauenture, and not by prowesse of thy handes. Wel damoyesel ye may say what ye wylle, but where someuer ye goo I wyll folowe you. Soo this Beaumayns rode with that lady tyl euensong tyme and euer she chyde hym and wold not reste. And they cam to a black launde, and there was a black hauhtorne, & theron henge a blak baner, and on the other syde there henge a black shelle, and by hit stode a blak spere grete and longe, and a grete black hors couerd with sylke, and a black stone fast by.

The sat a knyghte al armed in black harneis, and his name was\yn* knyzt of the blak laude, the\yn* damoysel whanne she sawe that knyghte she badde hym flee doun that valey for his hors was not sadeled. Gramercy sayd Beaumayns, for alweyez ye wold haue me a coward. With that the black knyghte, whanne she came nyghe hym spak, & sayd damoysel haue ye broughte this knyghte of kyngge Arthur to be your chamypon. Nay sayry knyghte sayd she, this is but a kechyn knaue that was fedde in kyngge Arthurs kechyn for almesse. Why cometh he sayd the knyghte in suche aray, hit is shame that he bereth you company, syr I can not be delyued of hym sayd she, for with me he rydeth maugre myn hede, god wold that ye shold put hym from me, outhere to slee hym and ye may, for he is an vnhappy knaue, and vnhapsely he hath done this day, thorou myshappe I sawe hym slee two knyghtes at the passage of the water, and other dedes he dyde besorne ryght merueyllous and thorou vn-happynes. that merueyllled me sayd the black knyghte that ony man that is of worshyp wylle haue adoo with hym, they knowe hym not sayd the damoysel. And for by cause he rydeth with me, they wene that he be some man of worship borne, that may be, sayd the blak knychte, how ba it as ye say that he be no man of worshyp he is a ful lykely persone, and ful lyke to be a stronge man, but thus moche shal I graunte you sayd the black knyghte. I shal putte hym doyne vpon one foote, and his hors and his harneys he shal leue with me, for it were shame to me to doo hym ony more harme. Whanne syre Beaumayns herd hym saye thus, he sayd syre knyghte thou art ful large of my hors and my harneys, I lete the wete it coste the noughte, & whether hit lyketh the or not this launde wylle I passe maugre thyn hede. And hors ne harneys getest thou none of my, but yf thou wynne hem with thy handes, and therfor lete see what thou canst doo. Sayst thou that sayd the black knychte, now yeys thy lady fro the, for it besemeth neuer a kechyn page to ryde with suche a lady. Thue lyest sayd Beaumayns I am a gentyl man borne and of more hyghe lygnage than thou, & that wyl I preue on thy body. Thenne in grete wrathe they departed with theyr horses, and came to gyders as hit had ben the thonder, and the black knyghtes spere brake, and Beaumayns threste hym thorou bothe his sydes, and there with his spere brak, and the truncheon lefte style in his syde. But nevertheles the black knyght drewe his suerd, and smote many eger strokes and of grete myghte, and hurte Beaumayns ful sore. But at the laste the black knyghte within an houre and an half he felle doune of his hors in swoune, and there he dyed. And themne Beaumayns sawe hym soo wel horsed and armed, themne he alyghte doune and armed hym in his armour, and soo took his hors and rode after the damoyseel. Whanne she sawe hym come nysge, she sayd awey kechyn knaue outhe of the wynde, for the smelle of thy budy clothes greueth me. Allas she sayd that euer suche a knaue shold by myshap slee soo good a knyghte as thou hast done, but alle thys is thyn vnhappyynes. But here by is one shal paye the alle thy payement, and therfore yet I councelyl the, flee. it may happen me sayd Beaumayns to be beten or slayne, but I warne you paye da-moyseel I wyll not flee awey, nor leue your company for al that ye can say, for euer ye say that they wil kylle me or bete me, but how someuer hit happeneth I escape, and they lye on the groûd. And therfore it werre as good for you to hold you styll thus al day rebuk-ynge me, for aweye wille I not ty! I see the vitermest of this journeye, or els I wylle be slayne, uther truly beten, therfore ryde on your waye. For folowe you I wille what someuer happen.

\textit{Capitulum octaum.}

Thus as they rode to gyders they sawe a knyght come dryuended by them al in grene bothe his hors & his harnex. And whanne he came nysge the damoyseel he asked her, is that my broder the black Knyzte that ye haue brought with you. Nay nay she sayd this vn-happy kechen knaue hath slayne your broder thorou vnhappyynesse. Allas sayd the grene knyghte that is grete pyte that soo noble a knyghte as he was shold soo vnhappely be slayne, and namely of a knaues band as ye say that he is. a traytour sayd the grene knyghte thou shalt dye for sleynge of my broder, he was a ful noble knyghte and his name was syr Percard. I defye the said Beaumayns, for I lete the wete I slewe hym knyghtely and not shamefully. There with al the grene knyghte rode vnto an horne that was grene, and hit henge vpon a thorne, and there he blewe thre dedely motys, and there came two damoysels and armed hym lyghtely. And thenne he took a grete hors, and a grene sheldre and a grene sperre. And thenne they ranne to gyders with al their myghtes and brake their speres vnto their bandes. And thenne they drewe their sverdes, and gaf many sadde strokes, and either of them wounded other ful yll. And at the last at an ouerthwart Beaumayns with his hors strake the grene knyghtes hors vpon the syde that he felle to the erthe. And thenne the grene knyghte auoyded his hors lightly, and dressid hym vpon foote. That sawe Beaumayns. And there with al he alighte and they rasshed to gyders lyke two myghty kempys a longe whyle, and sore they bledd bothe. With that cam the damoysel, and said my lord the grene knyghte, why for shame stande ye soo longe fyghtyng with the kechyn knae. Alas it is shame that euer ye were made knyghte to see suche a ladde to matche suche a knyghte, as the wede ouer grewe the corne. There with the grene knyght was ashamed, and there with al be gaf a grete stroke of myghte & clafe his sheldre thorou. Whan Beaumayns sawe his sheldre clouen a sonder, he was a lytel ashamed of that stroke and of her langage. And thenne he gaf hym suche a buffet vpon the helme that he felle on his knees.
And soo sodenly Beaumayns pulled hym vpon the ground grouelynge.
And thenne the grene knyghte cryed hym mercy, and yelded hym vnto syre Beaumayns, and prayd hym to slee hym not. Al is in vayn said Beaumayns for thou shalt dye but yf this damoysel that came with me praye me to saue thy lyf, and ther with al he vnlaes his helme lyke as he wold alse hym. Fy vpon the false kechen page, I wyll neuer praye the to saue his lyf, for I will neuer be soo moche in thy daunger. Thenne shalle he deye sayde Beaumayns. Not soo hardy thou bawdy knaue sayd the damoysel, that thou slee hym.
Alas sayd the grene knyghte suffre me not to dye for a fayre word may saue me. Fayr knyzt said the grene knyghte saue my lyf, & I wyl foryeue the, the dethe of my broder, and for euer to become thy main, and xxx knyghtes that hold of me for euer shal doo you seruyse. In the deylys name sayd the damoyesel that suche a bawdy kechen knaue shold haue the and thrytty knyghtes seruyse. Syr knyght saide Beaumayns alle this asayyleth the not, but yf my damoyesel spake with me for thy lyf. And ther with al he made a semblsunt to slee hym. lete be sayd the damoyesel thou bawdy knaue, slee hym not, for and thou do, thou shalt repente it. Damoyesel said Beaumayns your charge is to me a plesayr and at your commaundement his lyf shal be saued, & els not. Thenne he said sir Knyghte with the grene armes I releace the quyte at this damoyesels request, for I wylle not make her wrothe, I wille fulfylle al that she chargeth me. And thenne the grene knyghte kneled doun, and dyd hym homage with his swerd, thenne said the damoisel me-repenteth grene knyghte of your dommage, and of youre broders dethe the black knyghte, for of your helpe I had grete myster. For I drede me sore to passe this forest. Nay drede you not sayd the grene knyghte, for ye shal lodge with me this nytlye, and to morn I shalle helpe you thorou this forest. Soo they toke theyre horses and rode to his manoyr whiche was fast there besyde.

And euer she rebuked Beaumayns and wold not suffre hym to sytte at her table, but as the grene knyghte took hym and sat hym at a syde table. Merueylye me thynketh said the grene knyght to the damoyesel why ye rebuke this noble knyghte as ye doo, for I warne you damoyesel he is a full noble knyght, and I knowe no knyght is abel to matche hym therfor ye doo grete wrong to rebuke hym, for he shall do yow ryght good seruyse, for what someuer he maketh hym self, ye shalle preue at the ende that he is come of a noble blood and of kynges lygnage. Fy fy said the damoisel it is shame for you to saye of hym suche worship. Truly said the grene knyght it were shame for me to sey of hym ony disworship, for he hath preued hym self a better knyght than I am, yet haue I mett with many knyghtes in my dayes, and neuer or this tymes haue I fond no knyght his matche, and so that ngyht he they yede vnto rest, and al that ngyht the grene knyght commaunded thyrty knyghtes pryuely to watche Beaumayns for to kepe hym from al treason. And soo on the morny they al arose and herd their masse and brake theyr fast, and thynne they tooke their horses, and rode on theire waye, and the grene knyghte conuye d hem throu the forest, and there the grene Knyghte said my lord Beaumayns I & these thyrty knyghtes shal be alweye at your somons both erly and late at your callyng and whether that euer ye wil sende vs, it is wel said, sayd Beaumayns. Whanne that I calle vpon you, ye must yelde you vnto kynge Arthur and all your knyghtes, yf that ye so commaunde vs, we shal ben redy at all tymes the grene knyght. Fy fy vpon the in the deuys name saide the damoyssel that ony good knyghtes shold be obedient vnto a kechyn knaue. Soo thynne departed the grene Knyghte and the damoyssel. And thynne she said vnto Beaumayns why folowest thou me thou kechyn boye, caste away thy shelde and thy sperre, and flee awaie, yet I counseille the by tymes or thou shalt say ryght soone, Alas for were thou as wyzte as euer was Wade or Launcelot, Trystram, or the good knyghte syr lamaryk thou shalt not passe a pass here that is called the paas perillous. Damoyssel said Beaumayns who is aferd lete hym flee, for it were shame to torne ageyne sythen I haue ryden soo longe with yow. Wel said the damoyssel ye shal sone whether ye wyll or not.

Capitulum x.

Soo within a whyle they sawe a toure as whyte as ony snowe wel matchecold al aboute, and doubel dyked. And ouer the toure gate there henge a fyftly sheldes of dyuerece colours, and vnder that toure there was a fayr medow. And therin were many knyghtes and squyers to behold scaffoldes and pauelles, for there vpon the morn shold be a grete turnement, and the lord of the toure was in his castel and loket out at a wyndowe, and sawe a damoyssel, a dwarf and a knyzt armed at al poynetes. So god me helpe said the lord with ye knyzt wyll I juste, for I see that he is a kniizt arraizt & soo he armed hym and horesd hym hastely. And whanne he was on horsbak with his sheld and his sperre, it was al rede bothe his hors and his harneis, and alle that to hym longeth. And whanne that he came nyghe hym he wende it hadde ben his broder the black knyghte. And thenne he cryed a loude broder what doo ye in these marches, nay nay sayd the damoyssel, it is not he, this is but a kechyn knaue that was brought vp for almesse in kynge Arthurs courte. Neuertheles sayd the reed knyghte I wylle speke with hym or he departe. A sayd the damoyssel this knaue hath kyllde thy broder, and syre kay named hym Beaumayns, and this hors and this harneis was thy broders the black knyghte. Also I sawe thy broder the grene knyghte overcome of his handes. Now maye ye be reuenged vpon hym, for I may neuer be quyte of hym.

With this eyther knyghtes departed in sondre, and they cam to gyder with alle their myght, and eyther of their horses fell to the erthe, and they syouyded their horses, and put their sheldes afor them and drewe their swerdes, and either gaf other sadde strokes, now here, now there, racyng, racyng, foynyngge and hurlynge lyke two bores the space of two houres. And thenne she cryed on hyhe to the rede knyghte. Alas thou noble reed knyghte, thynke what worship hath followed the, lette neuer a kechyn knaue endure the soo lange as he doth. Thenne the reed knyght waxed wrothe and doubled his strokes and hurte Beaumayns wonderly sore that the blood ranne doun to the ground that it was wonder to see that stronge bataille. Yet at the last syre Beaumayns strake hym to the erthe, and as he wold haue slayne the reed knyghte he cryed mercey sayeng Noble knyghte sleon me not, and I shall yelde me to the with ftyfty knyghtes with me that be at my commandement. And I foryguye the al the despyte that thou hast done to me, and the dethe of my broder the black knyghte. All this ausilleth not said Bea-mayns, but yf my damoyssel praye me to saue thy lyf. And ther-with he maade sembluant to stryke of his hede. Lete be thou Beaumayns alee hym not, for he is a noble knyghte, and not soo hardy vpon thyne hede but thou saue hym. Thenne Beaumayns badde the reed knyghte stand vp and thanke the damoyssel now of thy lyf. Thenne the reed knyght praied hym to se his castel, and to be there al nyghte. Soo the damoysel thenne graunted hym, and there they had mery chere. But alweyes the damoysel spak many foule wordes vnto Beaumayns wherof the reed knyght had grete merueyille, and alle that nyghte the reed knyghte maade thre score knyghtes to watche Beaumayns that he shold haue no shame nor vylony. And vpon the morn they herd masse and dynd, and the reed knyghte came before Beaumayns with his thre score knyghtes, and there he profered hym his homage and feauce at al tymes he and his knyghtes to doo hym seruyse. I thanke you said Beaumayns, but this ye shalle graunte me. Whanne I calle vpon you to come afore my lord kynge Arthur and yelde you vnto hym to be his knyghtes. Syr said the reed knyghte I wille be redy and my felau-ship at your somons. So syr Beaumayns departed and the damoysel and euer she rode chydynge hym in the fowlest manere.

DAMOYSEL said Beaumayns ye are vncurteis so to rebuke me, as ye doo, for me semeth I haue done you good seruyse, and euer ye threate me I shal be betyn with knyghtes that we mete, but euer for al your boost they lye in the dust or in the myre, and therfor I pray you rebuke me no more. And whan ye see me beten or yolden as recresit thenne may ye bydde me goo from you shamefully, but fyriste I lete you wete I wylle not departhe from you, for I were were than a foole and I wold departhe from you all the whyle that I wynne worship. Wel said she, ryght soone ther shal mete a knyght shal paye the alle thy wages, for he is the most man of worship of the world excepte kynge Arthur. I will wel said Beaumayns, the more he is of worship, the more shalle be my worship to haue adoo with hym. Thenne anone they were ware, where was afore them a Cyte ryche and fayre. And betwixe them and the Cyte a myle and an half there was a fayre medowe that semed newe mowen, and therin were many pauelles fayre to beholde. Lo said the damoysel yonder is a lord that oweth yonder cyte, and his custome is whan the weder is fayr to lye in this medowe to juste and torneye. And euer there ben aboute hym fyue honerd knyghtes & gentilmen of armes, and there ben alle maner of games that ony gentylman can deuyse. That goodly lord saide Beaumayns wold I fayne see, thou shalt see hym tyme ymough saide the damoysele, and soo as she rode here she aspyed the pauelione, where he was. Loo sayd she seest thou yonder pauelione that is al of the colour of Inde and al maner of thynge that there is aboute men and wymmen, and horses trapped, sheldes and speres were all of the colour of Inde and his name is sir persant of Inde the moost lordlyest knyghte that ever thou lokest on. Hit may wel be said Beaumayns, but be he neuer so stoute a knyghte in this felde, I shalle abyde tyl that I see hym vnder his sheld. A fools saide she thou were better flee by tymes. Why sayd Beaumayns and he be suche a knyghte as ye make hym he wylle not sette vpon me with alle his men, or with his v. C. knyghtes. For and ther come no more but one at ones, I shalle hym not fayle whylest my lyf lasteth. Fy fy said the damoysele that ever suche a stynkyng kynge shold blowe suche a boost. Damoysele he said ye ar to blame soo to rebuke me. For I had leuer do fyue batails, than so to be rebuked, let hym come and thame lete hym doo his wert. Syre she said, I merueille what thou arte and of what kyn thou art come, boldly thou spekest, and boldly thou hast done, that haue I sene, therfore I praye the same thy self and thou mayst, for thy hors and thou haue had grete trauaylle. And I dred we dwelle ouer longe from the sege. For hit is but hens seuen myle, and alle perillous passages we ar past saue al only this passage, and here I dred me sore lest ye shalle ketche some hurte, therfore I wold ye were hens that ye were not brysed nor hurte with this stronge knyghte. But I lete you wete this syr Persant of ynde is no thyng of myste nor strength vnto the knyghte that leid the seye aboute my lady. As for that said syre Beaumayns be it as it be may. For sythen I am come soo nyghge this knyght I wille preue his myghte or I departe from hym, and els I shalle be shamed, and I now withdrawe me from hym. And therfore damoysele haue ye no doubte by the grace of god I shal be dele with this knyghte that within two houres after none I shalle deleyuer hym. And themne shal we come to the sege by day lyghte. O Jheu merueille haue I said the damoysele what maner a man ye be, for hit may neuer ben otherwyse but that ye be comen of a noble blood, for soo foule ne shamefully dyd neuer woman rule a knyghte as I haue done you, and euer curiosly ye haue suffred me, and that cam neuer but of a gentyl blood.

Damosysel sayd Beaumayns a knyght may lytel do that may not suffre a damoisel; for what someuer ye said vnto me, I took none hede to your wordes, for the more ye sayd the more ye angrydy me, and my wrathe I wrekdyd vpon them that I had a doo with al. And therefor alle the myssayenge that ye myssayed me, fordered me in my bataill & caused me to thynke to shewe & preue my self at the ende what I was, for perauentur thous I had mete in kyng Arthurs kechyn, yet I myzt haue had mete ynows in other places, but alle that I dyd it for to preue & assaye my frendes, and that shalle be knowen another day, and whether that I be a gentylman borne or none, I lete you wete fayre damoisel I haue done you gentilmans seruyse, and perauentur better seruyse yet wille I do or I departe from you. Allas she said fayr Beaumayns forgyue me alle that I haue myssaid or done ageynst the. Wyth alle my herte sayd he I forgyue it yow, for ye dyde no thyng but as ye shold doo, for al your euyl wordes pleasyd me, & damoisel saide Beaumayns syn hit lyketh you to saye thus fayre vnto me, wete ye wel it gladeth my herte gretely, and now me semeth ther is no knyght lyuynge but I am able ynoth for hym.

Capitulum Duodecimum.

Wyth this sir Peraunt of ynde had aspyed them as they houed in the feilde, and knystly he sente to them whether he came in werre or in pees. say to thy lord said beaumayns I take no force, but whether as hym lyst hym self. Soo the messager went aseyne vnto syr Peraunt, and told hym alle his answere. Wel thence will I haue shoo with hym to the vterance, and soo he purueyed hym and rode aseynst hym. And Beaumayns sawe hym and made hym redy, & ther they mette with all that euer theyr horses myght renne, and braste their speres ethyr in thre pyeces, & their horses rased so to gyders that bothe their horses felle dede to the erthe & lyxtyly they auoyded their horses, and put their sheldes afore them, & drewe their sweredes, and gaf many grete strokes that somtyme they hurtled to gyder that they felle grouselyng on the ground. Thus they fought two houre and more that their sheldes & theyr hauberkes were al forbewen, & in many stedys they were wounded. So at the last syr Beaumayns smote hym thorou the cost of the body, & thenne he retrayed hym here & there & knyghtly mayntened his bataill long tymes. And at the last though hym lothe were Beaumayns smote sir Persant aboue vpon the helme that he felle grouselyng to the erthe, & themne he lepte vpon hym ouerthwart and vnlaced his helme to hauie slayne hym. Thenn syr Persant yelded hym & asked hym mercy. With that cam y' damoisel & praid to saue his lyf. I wil wel, for it were pyte this noble knyght shold dye. grantercy sayd Persaunt gentyl knyzt & damoyzel. For certeynly now I wote wel it was ye that slewe my broder the black knyghte, at the black thorne, he was a ful noble knyzt, his name was syr Perard. Also I am sure that ye are he that wanne myn other brother the grene knyght, his name was syre Pertoolepe. Also ye wanne my broder the reed knyght syr Perrymones. And now syn ye haue wonne these, this shal I do for to please you ye shal haue homage & feaute of me, & an C knyghtes to be alweys at your commaundement to go & ryde where ye wil commaunde vs, & so they wente vnto sir Persauntes pavelione & dranken the wyne, & ete spyecees, & afterward syre Persaunte made hym to reste vpon a bedde vtynl souyer tymes, and after souper to bedde ageyne. Whan Beaumayns was abedde syr Persaunt had a lady a faire douzer of xvii yer of age and there he called her vnto hym, & charged her & commaunderd her vpon his blessynge to go vnto the knyghtes bedde, and lyd down by his syde, & make hym no straunge chere, but good chere, and take hym in thyne armes & kysse hym, & loke that this be done I charge you as ye wil have my loue & my good wil. So syr Persants doughter dyd as her fader bad her, and soo she wente vnto syr Beaumayns bed, & pryuesly she dispoylld her, & leid her doune by hym, & thenne he awoke & sawe her & asked her what she was, syre she said I am sir Persants douzer that by the commaundement of my fader am come hyder.
Be ye a mayde or a wyf said he, sir she said I am a clene maiden.
God defende sayd he that I shold defoyle you to doo syre Persaunt suche a shame, therfore sayre damoysel aryste oute of this bedde or els I wille. Syre she said I cam not to you by myr owne wille but as I was commaunded. Alas said syr Beaumayns I were a shameful knyghte and I wolde do your fader ony disworphe, and so he kyst her and soo she departed and came vnto syr Persaunt her fader, and told hym alle how she had spedde. Truly saide syre Persaunt what someuer he be, he is comen of a noble blood, and soo we leue hem there tyl on the morne.

Capitulum xiii.

AND soo on the morne the damoysel & sir Beaumayns herd masse & brake ther fast, and soo took ther leue. Fair damoysel said Persaunt whether ward ar ye way ledyng this knyghte, syr she said this knyghte is goyng to the sege, that besegeeth myyster in the castel Dangerus. A a sayd persaunt that is the knyghte of the reed launde, the whiche is the moost peryllous knyghte that I knowe now lyuyng, and a man that is withouen mercy, and men sayen that he hath seuen mens strength. god saue you said he to Beaumayns from ye knyghte, for he doth grete wrong to that lady, and that is grete pyte, for she is one of the fairest ladyes of the world, & me semeth that your damoysel is her sister, is not your name Lynet said he, ye sir said she, and my lady my systers name is dame Lyonessse.
Now shal I telle you said syr Persaunt, thys reed knyghte of the reed launde hath layne long at the sige weyl ngyhe this two yeres, and many tymes he myghte haue had her and he had wold, but he prolongeth the tyme to thyssentent, for to haue sir laiscelot du lake to doo bataille with hym, or syr Trystram or syr Lamerak de galys, or syre Gawayne, & this is his taryenge soo lone at the sige. Now my lord syre Persaunt of ynde saide the damoysel Lynet I requeytre you that ye wille make this gentilman knyghte or euer he fyghte with the reed knyghte. I will with all my herte said syr Persaunt and it please hym to take the ordre of knyghthode of so symple a, man as I am. Sire said Beaumayns I thanke you for your good will, for I am better sped, for certaynly the noble knyght sir Launcelot made me knyght. A said sir Persant of a more renomed knyghte myghte ye not be made knyghte. For of alle knyghtes he maye be called chyef of knyghthode, & so all the world saith that betwixe thre knyghtes is departed clerly knyghthode, that is launcelot du lake, syr Trystram de Lyonnes and sir Lamerak de galis, these bere now the renommee, there ben many other knyghtes as sir Palamydes the sarasyn and sir Sesere his broder. Also syr Bleoberys and sire Blamore de ganys his broder. Also syr Bors de Ganys & syr Ector de maryl & sir Percyuale de galis, these & many mo ben noble knyghtes, but ther be none y' passe y' iii aboue said, therfor god spede you wel said syr Persant, for and ye may matche the rede knyghte ye shalle be called the fourth of the world, sir said Beaumayns I wold fayne be of good fame, and of knyghthode. And I lette you wete I am of good men, for I dare say my fader was a noble man, and soo that ye wil kepe hit in close and this damoyse, I wyl telle you of what kyn I am. We wil not discover you said they both tyl ye commaunde vs by the feythe we owe vnto god. Truly thenne said he, my name is Gareth of Orkeney and kynges Lot was my fader, & my moder is kyng Arthurs syster, her name is Dame Morgawse, and sir Gawayne is my broder, and sir Agrauayne & sir Galeryes, and I am the yongest of hem alle. And yet wote not kyng Arthur nor sir Gawayn what I am.

Capitulum xiii.

Soo the book saith, that the lady that was besieged bad word of her systers and kyng by the dwerf and a knyghte with her, and how he had passed at the perillous passages. What manere a man is he said the lady, he is a noble knyght truly madame said the dwerf and but a yong man, but he is as lykely a man as euer ye sawe ony. What is he sayd the damoyse, and of what kynne is he comen, and of whome was he made knyghte. Madame said the dwerf he is the kynges sone of Orkeney, but his name I wil not telle you as at this tyme, but wete ye wel of syre launcelot was he maade knyght, for of none other wolde he be maade knyghte, and aine kay named hym Beaumayns. how escaped he said the lady from the bretheren of Persant. Madame he said as a noble knyghte shold. Fyrste he slewe two bretheren att a passage of a water. A saide she they were good knyghtes but they were murtherers, the one hyght Gherard de breusse, & the other knyght hyght sir Arnolde de Brewe, thence madame he recounted with the black knyght, and slewe hym in playne bataill & so he toke his hors & his armour & fought with the grene knyght & wanne hym in playne bataill, & in lyke wyse he serued the reed knyzt, and after in the same wyse he serued the blew knyzt & wan hym in playn bataill. thesie said the lady he hath ouer-come sir Persait of Inde, one of the noblest knyhtes of the world, & ye dworf said he hath wolde al the iii bretheres & alayn the black knyght, and yet he dyd more tofore he ouerthrew sir kay and left hym nyche dede vpon the ground. Also he dyd a grete batailll with syre launcelot, and there they departed on euyn handes. And thence syre launcelot made hym knyghte. Dworf saide the lady I am glads of these tydynges, therfor go thou in an hermytage of myn here by, and there shalt thou bere with the of my wyn in two flagns of siluer, they ar of two galons, and also two cast of brede with fatte venison bake and deynete foules, and a cop of gold here I delyuer the, that is ryche and precyous and here all this to myn hermytage, and put it in the heremytes handes. And sythen go thow vnto my syster and grete her wel, and commaunde me vnto that gentyl knyghte, and praye hym to ete and to drynke and make hym stronge, and say ye hym I thanke hym of his curtesye and goodenes that he wold take vpon hym suche labour for me that neuer dyd hym bounte nor curtesye. Also pray hym that he be of good herte & courage, for he shalle mete with a ful noble knyghte, but he is neyther of bounte, curtesye, nor gentylines, for he attendyth vnto nothyng but to murther, & that is the cause I can not prayse hym nor loue hym. So this dworf departed, and came to syre Persant where he fonde the damoyssel lynet and syr Beaumayns, and there he tolde hem alle as ye hane herd, and thence they took theyr leue, but syr Persant took an ambelyng hacney and convoyed hem on theyr wayes. And thenne belohte hem to god, and soo within a lytil whyle they came to that heremytage, and there they dranke the wyne, and ete the veneson and the foules baken.

And so whan they had repasted hem wel, the dwerf retorned aseyw n with his vesel vnto the castel aseyne, and there mete with hym the reed knyght of the reed laundes, and asked hym from whens that he came, and where he had ben. Syr sayd the dwerf I haue ben with my ladyes syster of this castel and she hath ben at kyng Arthurs court, and broughte a knyghte with her. theyme I accompte her transille but loste. For though she had broughte with her syre launcelot, sir Trystram, syr Lamerak or syr gawayne, I wold thynke my selfe good ynough for them all. it may well be said the dwerf, but this knyghte hath passed alle the peryllous passages & alayn the black knyghte and other two mo, and wonne the grene knyght, the reed knyghte and the blewe knyghte. theyme is he one of these four that I haue afore rehearsed. He is none of tho said the dwerf, but he is a kynges sone. What is his name sayd the reed knyght of the reed laund, that wille I not telle you sayd the dwerf, but sire kay vpon some name hym Beaumayns. I care not said the knyght what knyghte soo euer he be, for I shal soon deleyuer hym. And yf I euer matche hym he shalle haue a shameful dethe as many other haue had, that were pyte sayd the dwerf. And it is mereuell that ye make suche shameful warre vpon noble knyghtes.

Noo leue we the knyghte and the dwerf, and speke we of Beaumayns that al knyst lay in the heremytage, & vpon the morne he and the damoytel lynet herd their masse, and brake their fast. And theyme they toke theyr horses, and rode thorou oute a fair forest, and themne they came to a playne and sawe where were many pavelions and tentys, and a fayr castel, and there was moche smoke and grete noyse, and whanne they came nere the sege, syr Beaumayns aspyed vpon grete trees as he rode, how there henge ful goodly armed knyghtes by the neck and theire sheldes aboute theire neckys with their swerdes, and gyte spores vpon their heles, and soo there henge nyghe a fourty knyghtes shamefully with ful ryche armes. Theme sir Beaumayns abated his countenaunce & sayd what meneth this. Fayre syre said the damoysel abate not your chere for all this syghte, for ye must courage your self or els ye ben al shente, for all these knyghtes came hyder to this sege to rescowe my syster Dame lyones, and whanne the reede knyghte of the reed laund hadde ouercome hem, he putte them to this shamefule dethe withoute mercy and pyte. And in the same wyse he wyll serue you, but yf ye quyte you the better. Now Jhesu defende me said Beaumayns from suche a vy-laynous dethe and shenship of armes. For rather than I aboldo so be faren with all, I wolde rather be alayn manly in playn bataille. Soo were ye better said the damoysel, for trust not in hym is no curtosye but alle goth to the deth or shameful murther, and that is pyte, for he is a ful lykely man, wel made of body, and a ful noble knyghte of prowesse and a lorde of grete laundes and possessions. Truly said Beaumayns, he may wel be a good knyghte, but he vseth shamefule customs and it is merueylye that he endureth so longe that none of the noble knyghtes of my lord Arthurs haue not delt with hym. And thenne they rode to the dykes and sawe them double dyked with ful warly wallis, and there were lodged many grete lordes nyghe the wallys, and there was grete noyse of mynstralsay, and the see betyd vpon the one syde of the walles where were many shippes and maryners noysy with hale & how. And also there was fast by a Sykamore tree, and ther henge an horne the grettest that euer they sawe of an Olyfantes bone, and this knyght of the reed laund had hanged it vp ther that yf ther came ony arraunt knyghte, he muste blowe that horne, and thenne wylle he make hym redy & come to hym to doo bataille. But syr I pray you said the damoysel Lynet blowe ye not the horne tyl it be hyghe none, for now it is aboute pryme, & now encrased his myghte, that as men say he hath seuen mens strengthe. A fy for shame fayre damoysel say ye neuer soo more to me. For and he were as good a knyghte as euer was I shalle neuer fayle hym in his moost myghte, for outhere I wille wynne worship worshipfully or dye knyghtely in the felde, and ther with he spored his hors streyghte to the Sykamore tree, and blewse soo the horne egerly that alle the sege and the castel range therof. And themne there lepte outhe knyghtes outhe of their tentys and pannelions, and they within the castel loked ouer the wallis and oute att wyndowes. Themne the reed knyghte of the reed laudes armed hym hastely, and two barons sette on his spores vpon his heles, and alle was blood reed his armour speere and scheld. And an Erle buceld his helme vpon his hed, and thenne they broughte hym a rede speere and a rede stede, and soo he rode in to a lytyl vale vnder the castel, that al that were in the castel and at the sege myghte behold the bataill.

Capitulum xvi.

Syr sayd the damoysele Lynet vnto syr Beaumayns loke ye be gladde and lyght, for yonder is your dedely enemy, and at yonder wyndowe is my lady my syster dame Lyones. Where said Bea-mayns, yonder said the damoysele & poyned with her fynger, that is trouthe sayd Beaumaysns. She besemeth a ferre the fayrest lady that euer I loked vpon and truly he said I ake no better quarel than now for to do bataylle, for truly she shalle be my lady, and for her I wylle fyghte. And euer he loked vp to the wyndowe with gladde countenaunce. And the lady Lyones made curtosy to hym doune to the erthe with holdynge vp bothe their handes. Wyth that the reed knyghte of the reed laundes callid to syr Beaumayns, leue syr knyghte thy lokyng, and behold me I coucielle the, for I warne the wel she is my lady, and for her I haue done many stronge bataills. Yf thou haue so done said Beaumayns, me semeth it was but waste labour, for she loueth none of thy felauship, and thou to loue that loueth not the, is but grete foly. For and I understode that she were not glad of my comyng, I wold be auysed or I dyd bataille for her. But I understande by the syegyng of this castel she may forber thy felauship. And therfor weye thou wel thou rede knyghte of the reed laundes, I loue her, and wille rescowe her or els to dye. Saist thou that said the reed knyghte, me semeth, thou oughte of reson to beware by yonder knyghtes that thow sawest hange vpon yonder trees.
Fy for shame said Beaumayns that euer thou sholdest saye or do so euyl, for in that thou shamest thy self and knyghthode, and thou mayst be sure ther wyll no lady louse the that knoweth thy wycked custommes. And now thou wenest that the syghte of these hanged knyghtes shold ferre me. Nay truly not so, that shameful syght causeth me to haue courage and hardynes ageynyste the more than I wold have had ageynst the, and thou were a wel ruled knyght, make the redy sayd the reed knyghte of the reed laudes, and talke no lenger with me. Thenne syre Beaumayns badde the damoyael goo from hym, and thenne they putte ther spere in their reystes and came to gyders with alle their myzt that they had bothe, and eyther smote other in myddes of their sheldes that the paytrellys, sursenglys, and crowpers braste, and felle to the erthe bothe, and the reynys of their brydel in their handes, and soo they laye a grete whylle sore stonyed that al that were in the castel and in the sege wende their neckes bad ben broken, and thenne many a straunger and other sayd the straungre knyzt was a bygge man, and a noble juster, for or now we sawe neuer noo knyghte matche the reed knyghte of the reed laudes, thus they sayd bothe within the castel and withoute, thenne lyghtly they auoyd red theyr horses and put their sheldes afores them, and drewe their sweredes and ranne to gyders lyke two fyers lyons, and eyther gafe other suche buffets vpon their helmes that they relyd bacward bothe two stydês, and thenne they recouerd bothe and heue grete pyeces of theire harneis and theire sheldes, that a grete parte felle in to the feldes.

And thenne thus they foughyte tyl it was past none, and neuer wold stynte tyl att the laste they lacked wynde bothe, and theine they stode wagynge and scateryng, pontyng, blowynge and bledynge that al that behelde them for the moost party wepte for pyte. Soo when they had restyd them a whyle, they yede to bataille ageyne, tracyng, racyng, foynynge as two bores. And at some tym that they toke their renne as hit had ben two rammys & hurtled to gyders that somtyme they selle grouelyng to the erthe. And at somtyme they were so anosed that eyther took others swerd in stede of his owne.

Thus they endured ty luensoon tyne, that there was none that beheld them myghte knowe whether was lyke to wynne the bataill, and their armour was so fer hewen that men myzt see their naked sydes, and in other places, they were naked, but euer the naked places they dyd defende, and the rede knyghte was a wyly knyght of werre, and his wyly fyghtynge taughte syr Beaumayns to be wyse, but he aboughte hit fulle sore or he dyd aspye his fyghtynge. And thus by assente of them bothe they graunted eyther other to rest, and so they sette hem doune vpon two molle hylles there besydes the fyghtynge place, and eyther of hem vnlace his helme, and toke the colde wynd, for either of their pages was fast by them to come wha they called to vnlace their harneis and to sette hem on ageyn at their comauaundement. And thenne whan syr Beaumayns helme was of, he loked vp to the wyndowe, and there he sawe the faire lady Dame Lyones, and she made hym suche countenaunce that his herte waxed lyghte and joly, and ther with he had the reed knyghte of the reed laundes make hym redy and lete vs doo the bataille to the vtteraunce.
I will wel said the knyghte, and thenne they laced vp their helmes, and their pages suoyded, & they stepte to gyders & foughte freythely, but the reed knyghte of the reed laundes awayed hym, & at an ouerthwart smote hym within the hand, that his swerd selle oute of his hand, and yet he gaf hym another buffet vpon the helme that he felle grouelyng to the erthe, & the reed knyghte selle ouer hym, for to holde hym doune. Thenne cryed the maiden Lynet on hyghe.
O syr Beaumayns where is thy courage become. Alas my lady my syster beholdeth the and she sabbeth and wepeth, that maketh myn herte heuy. When syr Beaumayns herd her say soo, he abrayed vp with a grete myghte and gate hym vpon his feet, and lyghtely he lepte to his swerd and gryped hit in his hand and doubled his paas vnto the reed knyghte and there they foughte a newe bataille to gyder. But sir Beaumayns thenne doubled his strokes, and smote soo thycy that he smote the swerd oute of his hand, and thenne he smote hym vpon the helme that he felle to the erthe, and sir Beaumayns selle vpon hym, and vnlace his helme to haue slayne hym, and thenne he yielded hym and asked mercy, and said with a lowde vois O noble knyghte I yelde me to thy mercy. Thenne syr Beaumayns bethoughte hym vpon the knyghtes that he had made to be hanged shamefully, and thenne he said I may not with my worship saue thy lyf, for the shameful dethes that thou hast caused many ful good knyghtes to dye. Syre saide the reed knyghte of the reed laundes hold your hand and ye shalle knowe the causes why I put hem to so shamefull a deethe. saye on said sir Beaumayns. Syre I loued ones a lady a faire damoisele, and she had her broder slayne, and she said hit was syr lancelet du lake, or els syr gawayn, and she prайте me as that I loued her hertely that I wold make her a promyse by the feith of my knyghthode for to laboure dayly in armes vnto I mette wyth one of them, and alle that I myghte ouercome I shold putte them vnto a vylaynous deethe, and this is the cause that I haue putte alle these knyghtes to dethe, and soo I ensured her to do alle the vlyon vnto kyng Arthurs knyghtes, and that I shold take vengeanc vpon alle these knyghtes and syr now I wille the telle that evry daye my strengthe encreseth tylle none, and al this tyme haue I seuen mens strengthe.

Capitulum xviii.

Thenne came ther many Erles and Barons and noble knyghtes and praid that knyghte to saue his lyf and take hym to your prysoner. And all they felle vpon their knees and prayd hym of mercy, and that he wolde saue his lyf, and syr they all sayd it were fairer of hym to take homage and feaute, and lete hym holde his landes of you than for to slee hym, by his deth ye shall haue none auauntage and his mysdedes that ben done maye not ben vndone. And therfor he shal make amendys to al partyes & we al wil become your men and doo you homage and feaute. Fayre lordes said Beaumayns, wete you wel I am ful lothe to see this knyzt neuertheless he hath done, passyng ylle and shamefully. But in soo moche al that he dyd was at a ladies request I blame hym the lesse, and so for your sake I wil releace hym that he shal haue his lyf vpon this couenaunt, that he goe within the castel, and yelde hym there to the lady. And ye she wil forguye and quyte hym, I wil wel. With this he make her amendys of al the trespas he hath done ageynst her and her landes. And also whanne that is done that ye goe vnto the courte of kyng Arthur, and that ye aske syr Launcelot mercy, & syr Gawayn for the euyl wil ye haue had ageynst them. sire said the reed knyght of the reed laundes, al this wil I do as ye commaunde, and syker assurance and borowes ye shal haue. And soo thenne whan the assurance was made, he made his homage and feaute, and alle the erles and barons wyth hym. And thenne the mayden Lynet came to syre Beaumayns, and vnarmed hym and serched his woundes, and stynted his blood, and in lyke wyse she dyd to the rede knyghte of the reed laundes. and there they sojournde ten dayes in their tentes, and the reed knyghte made his lorde and seruauntes to doo alle the pleasure that they myghte vnto syre Beaumayns. And soo within a whyle the reed knyghte of the reed laundes yede vnto the castel, and putte hym in her grace. And soo she recuyed hym vpon suffysaunt seurte, so alle her hurtes were wel restored of al that she coude complayne, and thenne he departed vnto the courte of kyng Arthur, and there openly the reed knyghte of the reed laundes putte hym in the mercy of syre Launcelot and syr Gawayne, and there he told openly how he was overcomme and by whom, and also he told alle the bataile from the begynnynge vnto the endyng. Jhesu mercy sayd kyng Arthur and sire Gawayne we merueyille moche of what blood he is come, for he is a noble knyghte. Haue ye no merueyll syde Launcelot, for ye shal ryght wel wete that he is comen of a ful noble blood, and as for his myghte and hardynes ther ben but fewe now lyuynge that is so myghty as he is, and so noble of prowesse. It semeth by yow said kyng Arthur that ye knowe his name, and fro whens he is come, and of what blood he is. I suppose I doo so said Launcelot, or els I wold not haue yeuen hym thordre of knysthode, but he gaf me suche charge at that tyme that I shold neuer discouer hym vntyl he requyred me or els it be knowen openly by some other.
Capitulum xii.

Now torne we vnto syr Beaumayns that desyred of Lynet that he myght see her syster his lady. Syre she said I wold sayne ye sawe her. Thenne syr Beaumayns al armed hym and toke his hors and his spere and rode streyzt vnto the castel. And whanne he cam to the gate he fon a there many men armed and pulled vp the drawe brydge & drewe the porte close. Thenne mervielle he why they wold not suffre hym to entre. And them he loked vp to the wyn-dow. And there he sawe the fyr Lyons that said on hyghe go thay way, syr Beaumayns, for as yet thou shalt not haue holy my loue vnto the tymne that thou be calyed one of the nombre of the wortby knyghtes. And therfor goo laboure in worship this twelue monethe, and thenne thou shalt here newe tydynge. Alas faire lady said Beaumayns I haue not deserued that ye shold shewe me this straungenes, and I had wend that I shold haue ryght good chere with you and vnto my power I haue deserued thanke, and wel I am sure I haue boughte your loue with parte of the best blood within my body. Fayre curteis knyghte said Dame Lyonese, be not dis-pleasyd nor ouer hasty, for wete you wel, your grete travaill nor good loue shal not be lost, for I consyrdre your grete travaill & labour, your bounte and your goodnes as me oughte to doo. And thersfore goo on your wey, and loke that ye be of good conforte for all shal be for your worship, and for the best, & perde a twelue moneth wille soone be done, and trust me fair knyghte I shal be true to you and neuer to bitraye you, but to my dethe I shalle loue you, and none other. And ther with alle she torne her from the wynowe, and syr Beaumayns rode away ward from the castel makyng grete dole, and soo he rode here and there & wyste not ne where he rode tyl hit was derke nytghete. And thenne it happend hym to come to a poure mans hous and there he was herborowed all that nghthe.

But syr Beaumayns hadde no rest but walowed and wyrathed for the loue of the lady of the castel. And soo upon th morowe he took his hors and rode vntyl vnderne, and thene he came to a brode water, and there by was a grete lodge, and there he slyghte to slepe and leid his bede vpon the shelde, and bitoke his hors to the dwarf, and commaunded hym to watche al nyghte. Now torne we to the lady of the same castel, that thoughte moche vpon Beaumayns, and thenne she called vnto her syr Gryngamore her broder, and praied hym in al maner as he loued her hertely that he wold ryde after syr Beaumayns, and euer haue ye wayte vpon hym tyl ye may fynde hym alepynge, for I am sure in his heuynes he wil alyzt doun in some place, and feye hym doune to slepe. And therfor haue ye your wayte vpon hym, and in the preuyest manere ye can take his dwerf, and go ye your waye with hym as faste as euer ye maye or syr Beaumayns awake. For my syster Lynet telleth me that he can telle of what kynreed he is come, and what is his ryghte name. And the meane whyle I and my syster wille ryde vnto youre castel to awayte whanne ye brynge with you the dwerf. And thenne whan ye haue broughte hym vnto youre Castel, I wylle haue hym in examynacion my self, vnto the tyme that I knowe what is his ryghte name, and of what kynred he is come, shalle I neuer be mery at my herte. Syster said syre Gryngamore alle thys shalle be done after your entente. And soo he rode alle the other dayes and the nyghte tylle that he fond syre Beaumayns lyenge by a water and his bede vpon his shelde for to slepe. And thenne whanne he sawe syre Beaumayns fast on slepe, he cam stylly stalkyng behynde the dwerf and plucked hym fast vnder his arme, and soo he rode aweye with hym as faste as euer he myght vnto his owne castel.

And this syre Gryngamors armes were alle blak and that to hym longeth. But euer as he rode with the dwerf toward his castel, he cryed vnto his lord, and prayd hym of helpe. And there with awoke syre Beaumayns, and vp he lepte lyghtly, & sawe where the Gryngamor rode his waye with the dwerf, and soo syr Gryngamor rode oute of his syghte.

Thenne syre Beaumayns putte on his helme anone, and buckeld his shelde, and tooke his hors, and rode after hym alle that euer he myghte ryde thorou marys and feldes and grete dales, that many tymes his hors and he plonged ouer the hede in depe myres, for he kneue not the wey, but took the gaynest waye in that woonenes that many tymes he was lyke to perysse. And at the laste hym happend to come to a fayre grene waye. And there he mette with a poure man of the countreye whom he salwed & asked hym whether he mette not with a knyghte vpon a black hors & all black harneis a lytel dwerp syttynghe behynnde hym with heuy chere. Syre saide this poure man here by me came syre Gryngamor the knyght with suche a dwerp mornyng as ye saye, & therfore I rede you not folowe hym, For he is one of the perylloust knyghtes of the world, and his castel is here nyhe hand but two myle, therfor we aduyse you ryde not after syr Gryngamor but yf ye owye hym good wille.

Soo leue we syre Beaumayns rydyng toward the castel and speke we of sir Gryngamor and the dwerp. Anone as the dwerp was come to the castel, dame Lyones and dame Lynet her systyr asked the dwerp where was his maister borne, and of what lygnage he was come. And but yf thou telle me said dame Lyones thou shalt neuer escape this castel, but euer here to be prysoner. As for that said the dwerp I fere not gretely to telle his name and of what kynne he is come. Wete ye wel he is a kynges sone, and his moder is systyr to kyng Arthur, and he is broder to the good knyghte of syre Gawayne, and his name is syre Garth of Orkeney, and now I haue told you his ryght name, I praye you fayre lady lete me goo to my lord ageyne, for he wille neuer oute of this countrey vntyl that he haue me ageyne. And yf he be angry, he wil doo moche harne or that he be stynte, and worche you wrake in this countray.

As for that thretyng sayd syr Gryngamore be it as it be may we wille goo to dyner, and soo they wasshed and wente to mete, and made hem mery and wel at ease, by cause the lady Lyones of the castel was there, they made grete Joyce.

Truly Madam sayd Lynet vnto her systyr wel maye he be a kynges sone, for he hath many good tatches on hym, for he is curteis and mylde and the moost sufferyng man that euer I mette with al. For I dar saye ther was neuer gentylwoman reyuled man in soo foule a manere, as I haue rebuked hym. And at all tymes he gafe me goodely and meke answere agye. And as they set thus talkynge, ther came sire Gareth in at the gate with an angry countenaunce and his swerd drawn in his hand, and cryed aloude that alle the castel myzt here hit sayeng thou traitour syre Gryngamor deluyer me my dwerp ageyn, or by the feith that I owe to the ordre of knyghthode I shal doo the al the harme that I can. Thenne syr Gryngamor loket oute at a wyndow and said syr gareth of Orkeney leue thy boastynge wordes, for thou getest not thy dwerp ageyn. Thou cowerd knyghte sayd syr Gareth brynge hym with the, and come and doo bataylle with me, and wynne hym and take hym. So wil I do said syr Gryngamor and me lyst, but for al thy grete wordes thou getest hym not. A sayr broder said dame Lyones I wold be had his dwerp ageyn, for I wold he were not wroth, for now he hath told me al my desyre I kepe no more of the dwerp. And also broder he hath done moche for me, and deluyerd me from the reed knyghte of the reed laundes, and therfor broder I owe hym my seruyse afore al knyghtes lyuyng. And wete ye wel that I loue hym before al other, and ful sayne I wold speke with hym. But in no wyse I wold that he wist what I were, but that I were another straung lady. Wel said syr Gryngamor sythen I knowe now your wille, I wylye obeye now vnto hym. And ryght ther with al he wente doun vnto syr Gareth, and said syr I crye you mercy, and al that I hauue mysdone I wille amend hit at your wille. And therfore I pray you that ye wold alyghte, and take suche chere as I can make you in this castel. Shal I hauue my dwerp saide syre Gareth, ye syr, and alle the pleassunce that I can make you, for as soone as your dwerp told me what ye were and of what blood ye ar come, and what noble dedes ye hauue done in these marches, thenne I repentyd of my dedes.

And themne syre Gareth alyghte, and ther came his dwerp & took his hore. O my felawe said syr gareth, I hauue had many aduentures for thy sake. And soo syre Gryngamor tooke hym by the hand, and ledde hym in to the halle where his own wyf was.

And thenne came forth Dame Lyones arrayed lyke a pryncesse, and there she made hym passyng good chere and he her aseyne, and they had goodely langage & louely countenaunce to gyder. And syre Gareth thought many tymes Ihesu wold that the lady of the castel perillous were so fayre as she was, there were al maner of games & playes of dauncyng and syngyng. And euer the more syre Gareth bihelde that lady, the more he loued her, and so he brenned in loue that he was past hym self in his reason, and forth toward nyghte they yede vnto souper, and syre Gareth myghte not ete for his loue was soo hote, that he wist not where he was. Alle these lokes aseyd syr Gryngamor, and thenne at after souper he callid his syster Dame Lyones vnto a chamber, and sayd, fair syster I haue wel aseyd your coutenaunce betwixe you and this knyght. And I wil syster that ye wete he is a ful noble knyzt, & yf ye can make hym to abyde here I wil do hym all the pleasyr y' I can, for & ye were better than ye ar ye were wel bywaryd vpon hym. Fayre broder said Dame Lyones I understonde wel that the knyghte is good & come he is of a noble hous. Notwithstandyng I willes aseye hym better how be it I am moost beholding to hym of ony ethely ma for he hath had grete labour for my loue, and passid many a daungerous passage. Ryght soo syr Gryngamor wente vnto syr Gareth and said syre make ye good chere, for ye shal haue none other cause, for this lady my syster is yours at al tymes her worship saued, for wete ye wel she loueth you as wel as ye doo her and better, yf better may be. And I wist that said syr Gareth, ther lyued not a gladder man than I wold be. Upon my worship said syr Gryngamor trust vnto my promysse. And as long as it lyketh you ye shal sojourn with me and this lady shal be with vs dayly and nyghtly to make you alle the chere that she can. I wille wel saied syre Gareth. For I haue promysed to be nyghe this countrey this twelve moneth. And wel I am sure kyage Arthur and other noble knyghtes wille fynde me where that I am within this twelfe moneth. For I shal be soughte and founden yf that I be on lyne. And thenne the noble knyghte syre Gareth wenete vnto the dame Lyones whiche he thene moche loued, & kyset her many tymes, and eyther made grete joye of other. And there she promysed hym her loue certaynly to loue hym and none other the dayes of her lyf. Thenne this lady dame Lyones by the assente of her broder told syr Gareth alle the trouth what she was. And how she was the same lady that he dyd batail for, and how she was lady of the castel peryllous, and there she told hym how she caused her broder to take awey his dwerf.

For this cause to knowe the certaynte what was your name, and of what kynne ye were come. And thenne she lete fetche tofore hym Lynet the damoysele that had ryden with hym many wylsome wayes. Thenne was syre Gareth more gladder than he was to fore. And the seyde theynthumb ethre other to loue, and neuer to faylle whyles their lyf ethreth. And soo they brente bothe in loue that they were accorded to abate their lustes secretely. And there Dame Lyones cponseyleed syr Gareth to sleepe in none other place but in the halle. And there she promysed hym to come to his bedde a lytel afore mydnyght. This councel was not soo pryuely kepeth but it was undeethande, for they were but Yonge bothe and tendyr of age, and had not vased none suche craftes to forne. Wherfor the damoysele Lynet was a lytel displeysyd, and she thoughte her syster Dame Lyones was a lytel ouer hasty, that she myghte not abyde the tyme of her maryage. And for sauyng their worship, she thoughte to abate their hote lustes.

And so she lete ordeyne by her subtyl craftes that they had not their ententes neyther with other as in her deytes, vntyl they were maryed. And soo it past on. At after souper was made cleene suoydaunce, that euer lord and lady shold goo vnto his rest. But syr Gareth said playly he wold goo noo fether than the halle, for in suche places he said was conuenyent for an arraunt kynt to take his rest in, and so there were ordeyne grete couches, & theron fether beddes, & there leyde hym doune to slepe, & within a whyle cam dame Lyones wrapped in a mantel furred with Ermyne & leid her doun besydes syr gareth. And there with alle he beganne to kysse her. And thene he loked afore hym and there he appercentued and sawe come an armed knyght with many lyghtes aboute hym, and this knyghte had a longe Gyfarne in his hand, and maade grym countenaunce to synte hym. Whanne syre Gareth sawe hym come in that wyse, he lepte oute of his bedde and gate in his hand his swerd and lepte strayte toward that knyght. And whanne the knyght sawe syr Gareth come so fyersly vpoun hym, he smote hym with a foyne thorou the thyrke of the thyz that the wounde was a shaftmon brode and had cutte a two many vaynes and senewe. And there with al syr Gareth smote hym vpon the helme suche a buffet that he felle grouelyng, and thenne he lepte ouer hym and vnlace his helme and smote of his hede fro the body. And thenne he bledde so fast that he myghte not stannde, but soo he leid hym doun vpon his bedde, and there he swounded and laye as he had ben dede. Thanene dame Lyones cryed alowde, that her broder syr Gryngamor herd, and came doune. And whan he sawe syr Gareth soo shamefully wounded, he was sore displeasyd and sayd I am shamed that this noble knyghte is thus honoured. Syr sayd syr Gryngamore hou may this be, that ye be here, and thys noble knyghte wounded. Broder she said I can not telle yow. For it was not done by me nor by myn assente. For he is my lord and I am his, and he must be myn husband, thercfore my broder I wille that ye wete I shame me not to be with hym, nor to doo hym alle the pleasyr that I can. Syster sayd syre Gryngamore, and I wille that ye wete it and syr Gareth both that it was neuer done by me nor by my assente that this vnhappy dede was done. And there they stauched his bledunge as wel as they myght, and grete sorou made syr Gryngamor and Dame Lyones. And forthe with al came Dame Lynet and toke vp the hede in the syghte of hem alle, and enoyned it with an oynement there as it was smyten of, and in the same wyse she dyd to the other parte there as the hede stak. And thenne she sette it to gyders, and it stak as fast as euer it did. And the knyghte arose lyghtely vp, and the damoyssel Lynet put hym in her chambr. Alle this sawe sir Gryngamor and dame Lyones, and soo dyd sir Gareth, and wel he espyed that it was the damoysele Lynet that rode with hym thorou the peryllous passages. A wel damoysele said syre Gareth I wende wold not haue done as ye haue done. My lord Gareth said Lynet, alle that I haue done I will anowe, and alle that I haue done shal be for youre honoure and worship, and to vs alle. And soo within a whyle syr Gareth was nyghhe hole, & waxed lyghte and jocundede, and sange, daunced and game, and he and dame Lynes were soo hote in brennynge love that they made their cousenaunte at the tenth nyghte after that she shold come to his bedde. And by cause he was wouded afore, he laid his armour, and his swerd nyghhe his beddes syde.

Ryght as she promysed she came, and she was not soo soone in his bedde, but she aspyed an armed knyghte comyng toward the bedde, there with alle she warned syr Gareth, and lyghtly thorou the good helpe of Dame Lynes he was armed, and they hustled to gyders with grete jre & malyce al aboute the hall, and there was grete lyght as it had ben the nombre of xx torches bothe before and behynd, soo that syr Gareth strayne hym, soo that his old wounde braste aseyne on bledyng, but he was hote and couragyous and toke no kepe, but with his grete force he stroke doume that knyghte, and voyded his helme, and strake of his hede. Thenne he hewe the hede in an hondenr pfyces. And whan he had done so he took vp alle tho pfyces and threw hem oute at a wyndowe in to the dyches of the castel, and by this done, he was so faynt that vnnethes he myght stande for bledyng. And by them he was al most vnarmed, he felle in a dedely sowone in the flore. And thenne dame Lynes cryed soo that syr Gryngamor herd. And whan he cam and fond syr Gareth in that plyte he made grete sorou, & there he awaked sir Gareth, and gaf hym a drynke that releued hym wonderly wel, but the sorou that Dame Lynes made there maye no tonge telle, for she soo faryd with her self as she wold haue dyed. Ryghte soo cam this damoysele Lynet before hem al, and she had fette alle the gobbets of the hede that syr Gareth had thrown out at a wyndowe, and there she enoyyed hem as she had done to fore, & set them to gyder ageyn. Wel damoiseel Lynet said syre Gareth, I haue not deseruedalle this despyte that ye doo vnto me. sir knyghte she said, I haue no thyng do, but I will auowe. And al that I haue done shalle be to your worship and to vs al. And thence was syre Gareth stauched of his bledyng. But the leches said, that ther was no man that bare the lyf, shold hele hym thorou oute of his wondere, but yf they heled hym that caused that stroke by enchaunteument.

So leue we syr Gareth there with syr Gryngamore and his systers, and thorne we vnto kyngge Arthur that at the nexte feast of Pentecost helde his feast, and there cam the grene knyght with fyfty knyghtes, and yelded hem all vnto kyngge Arthur. And so ther came the reed knyghte his broder, and yelded hym to kyng Arthur and three score knyghtes with hym. Also there came the blewe knyghte broder to them with an honderd knyghtes, & yelded hem vnto kyngge Arthur, and the grene knyghtes name was Partolyte, and the reed knyghtes name was Perymones, and the bleue knyghtes name was syr Persant of Inde, these thre bretheren told kyngge Arthur how they were overcome by a knyghte that a damosel had with her, and called hym Beaumayns. Jhesu sayd the kyngge I merueylle what knyghte he is, and of what lygnage he is come. He was with me a twelue monethe, and pourclye and shamefully he was fostred, and syre kay in scorne named hym Beaumayns. Soo ryghte as the kyng stode soo talkyng with these thre bretheren, there came syr Launcelot du lake and told the kyngge that there was come a goodly lord with vj C knyghtes with hym, thenne the kyngge wente oute of Carlyon, for there was the feest, and there came to hym this lord, and salwed the kyngge in a goodly manere. What wylle ye sayd kyng Arthur, and what is youre erand. Syr he said my name is the reed knyghte of the reed laundes, but my name is syr Ironsyde, and syre wete ye wel, here I am sente to yow, of a knyght that is called Beaumayns, for he wanne me in playne bataille hande for hand, and soo dyd neuer no knyght but he that euere had the better of me this xxx wynter, the whiche commaundned to yeld me to yow at youre wylle, ye are welcom said the kyngg, for ye haue ben long a grete foo to me and my Courte, and now I truste to god I shalle soo entreat you that ye shal be my frend. Syre, bothe I and these fyue honderd knyghtes shal alweyes be at your somons to doo you servyse as maye lye in oure powers. Jheu! mercy said kyng Arthur I am moche beholdynge vnto that knyght, that hath put soo his body in deuoyre to worshippe me & my Courte. And as to the Ironsyde that art called the reed knyghte of the reed laundes thou arte called a peryllous knyzt. And yf thou wylt holde of me I shal worshippe the and make the knyghte of the table round, but thenne thou must be no more a murtherer. Syre as to that I haue promysed vnto syre Beaumayns neuer more to vse suche custommes, for all the shameful customes that I vced I dyd at the request of a lady that I loued, and therfor I must goo vnto syr Launcelot and vnto syre Gawayne, and aske them foryeuenes of the eyyll wylle I had vnto them, for alle that I put to deth was al only for the loue of syr Launcelot and of syr Gawayne. They ben here now said the kyng afores the, now maye ye saye to them what ye wylle. And thenne he kneeld doun vnto syre Launcelot and to syre Gawayne and prayd them of for- yeuenes of his enemyste that euer he had ageynste them.

Thenne goodely they said al at ones, god foryeue you and we do, and praye you that ye will telle vs where we may fynde syr Beaumayns. Fayre lorde said syr Ironsyde I can not telle you, for it is ful hard to fynde hym, for suche yong knyghtes as he is one, whanne they be in their adventuress ben neuer abdyngye in no place. But to saye the worship that the reed knyghte of the reed laundes and syr persaunt and his broder said of Beaumayns, it was merueil to here. Wel my fayre lorde said kynge Arthur, wete you wel, I shalle do you honour for the loue of syr Beaumays, and as soone as euer I mete with hym I shalle make you al vpon one day knyghtes of the table round. And as to the syre Persaunt of Inde thou hast ben euer called a ful noble knyghte, and soo haue euer ben thy thre bretheren called. But I merueil said the kyng that I here not of the black knyzt your broder, he was a ful noble knyghte. Syr sayd Pertolype the grene knyght syr Beaumayns slewe hym in a recoûtre with his spere, his name was syr Perard. that was grete pyte sayd the kyng and soo said many knyghtes. For these four bretheren were ful wel knowen in the courte of kyngge Arthur for noble knyghtes, for long tyme they had helden werre ageynst the knyghtes of the round table. Thenne sayd Pertolepe the grene knyghte to the kyngge atte a passage of the water of mortayse there encountred syr Beaumayns with two bretheren that euer for the moost party kepte that passage, and they were two dedely knyghtes, and there he slewe the eldest broder in the water, and smote hym vpon the heede suche a buffet that he felle doune in the water, and there he was drownad, & his name was sir Garard le brewse, and after he slewe the other broder vpon the lond, his name was syr Arnold le brewse.

Capitulum xxvi.

Soo thenne the kyng and they wente to mete, and were serued in the best manere. And as they satte at the mete, ther came in the quene of Orkeney with ladyes & knyghtes a grete nombre. And thenne syr Gawayn, syr Agraunyn and Gaherys arose, and wente to her, and salewed her vpon their knees, and asked her blessyng. For in xv yere they had not sene her. Thenne she spak on hyghte to her broder kyngge Arthur, where haue ye done my yong sone syr Garath, he was here amongst you a twelue moneth, & ye made a kechyn knaue of hym, the whiche is shame to you all. Allas where haue ye done my dere sone that was my joye and blysse. O dere moder said syr Gawayn I knewe hym not. Nor I said the kyngge that now me repenteth, but thanked be god he is prued a worshipful knyghte as ony is now lyuyng of his yeres, & I shal neuer be glad tyl I may fynde hym. A broder sayd the quene vnto kyngge Arthur and vnto syr Gawayne and to alle her sones, ye dyd your self grete shame whan ye amongst you kepte my sone in the kechyn and fedde hym lyke a poure hog. Fayr sister said kyngge Arthur ye shall ryghte wel wete, I knewe hym not, nor no more dyd syre Gawayn, nor his bretheren, but sythen hit is soo said the kyng that he is thus gone. from vs alle, we must shape a remedy to fynde hym. Also systerme semeth ye myght haue done me to wete of his comynge. And thenne and I had not done wel to hym, ye myzt haue blamed me.
For whan he cam to this courte he came lenyng vpon two mens holders as though he myght not haue gone. And thenne he asked me thre yestes, and one he asked the same day, that was that I wold gyue hym mete ynoogh that twelue moneth, and the other two yestes he asked that day a twelue moneth and that was that he myghte haue thaduenture of the damoysel Lynet, and the thyrd was that syre Launceleot shold make hym knyght whan he desyre hym. And soo I graunted hym alle his desyre, and many in this Courte murerilil that he desyreth his sustenaunce for a twelw monethe. And there by we demed, many of vs that he was not come of a noble hous. Syre said the Quene of Orkeney vnto kynge Arthur her broder, wete ye wel that I sente hym vnto you rynght wel armed and horsed and worshipfully bysene of his body, and gold and syluer plente to spend, it may be said the kynge, but therof sawe we none, sauf that same daye as he departed from vs, knyghtes told me that ther came a dwarfe hyder sodenly and broughte hym armoure and a good hors full wel and rychely bysene, and there at we al had merueille fro whens that rycheesse came, that we demed al that he was come of men of worship.
Broder said the Quene, alle that ye saye I byleue, for euer sythen he was grown, he was merueillously wytted, and euer he was feythful & true of his promesse. But I merueille said she that syre kay dyd mocke hym and scorne hym, and gaf hym that name Beaumayns, yet syr kay said the quene named hym more ryghteousely than he wende. For I dare saye and he be on lyue, he is as fair an handed man and wel disposed as ony is lyuynge. Syre said Arthur lete this langage be stynle, and by the grace of god he shal be founde, and he be within this seuen royames, and lete alle this passe and be mery, for he is proued to be a man of worship, and that is my joye.
Capitulum xxvii.

Thenne said syr Gawayne and his bretheren vnto arthur, syre and ye wyl gyue vs leue we wille go and sekeoure brother. Nay said syr Launcelot that shalle ye not nede, and so said syr Bawdewyn of Bretayne, for as byoure aduyys the kynge shal sende vnto dame Lyons a messager, and praye her that she wille come to the courte in alle the hast that she may, and doubt ye not she wille come. And thene she may gyue you best coiceille where ye shal fynde hym. This is wel said of you said the kynge. Soo thenne goodey letters were made, and the messager sente forth, that nyghte & day he wente tyl he cam vnto the castel perillous. And thene the lady dame Lyons was sente for there as she was wyth syr Gryngamor her broder and syre Gareth. And whan she understode this message, she badde hym ryde on his way vnto kynge Arthur, and she wold come after in al goodey hast. Thenne whan she cam to syr Gryngamor and to sir Gareth, she told hem al how kynge Arthur had sente for her, that is by cause of me said syr Gareth. Now auyse me said dame Lyons what shalle I seye and in what manere I shal rule me. My lady and my loue said sir Gareth I pray you in no wyse be ye aknowen where I am, but wel I wote my moder is there and alle my bretheren, and they wille take vpon hem to seke me, I wote wel that they doo. But this madame I wold ye sayd and aduyed the kynge whan he questyoned with you of me. Thenne maye ye say, this is your aduyys that and hit lyke his good grace, ye wille doo make a crye ayenst the feest of thassumpcion of our lady that what knyghte there preueth hym best he shal welde you and all your land. And yf soo be that he be a wedded man that his wyf shall the dege and a coronal of gold besette with stones of vertue to the valewe of a thousand pound and a whyte Jarfaucon.

Soo dame Lyons departed, and came to kynge Arthur where she was nobly receyued, and there she was sore questyoned of the kynge and of the queene of Orkeney. And she ansered where syr Gareth was she coude not telle. But thus moche she said vnto Arthur, syre I wille lete crye a turnement that shal be done before my castel at the Assumpcion of oure lady, and the crye shal be this that you my lorde Arthur shal be there, & your knyghtes, and I will pursuie that my knyghtes shal be ageynst yours. And thenne I am sure ye shal here of syr Gareth. this is wel aduyysd said kyng Arthur, and soo she departed. And the kyng and she maade grete prouysyon to that turnement. Whan dame Lyones was come to the yle of Aylyon that was the same yle ther as her broder syr Gryngamor dwelte, thene she told hem al how she had done, and what promyse she had made to kyng Arthur. Alas said syr Gareth, I haue ben soo wounded with vnhappyynes sythen I cam in to this castel that I shal not be abyl to doo at that turnement lyke a knyghte, for I was neuer thorouly hole syn I was hurte. Be ye of good chere said the damoysele Lynet, for I vndertake within these xv dayes to make you hole and as lusty as euer ye were. And thenne she leid an oyntement & a salue to hym as it plessyd to her that he was neuer so fresh nor soo lusty. Thene said the damoysele Lynet, send you vnto syr Persaunt of ynde, and assomone hym and his knyghtes to be here with you as they haue promysed. Also that ye send vnto syr Ironsyde that is the reed knyghte of the reed laundes, and charge hym that he be redy with you with his hole somme of knyghtes, and thenne shalle ye be abyl to matche with kyng Arthur and his knyghtes. Soo this was done & alle knyghtes were sente for vnto the castel peryllous, & themne the reed knyght hauned and said vnto dame Lyones and to syre Gareth, Madame & my lord syr Gareth ye shal vnderstande that I haue ben at the court of kyng Arthur and sire Persaunt of Inde and his bretheren, and there we haue done oure homage as ye commaundde vs. Also syr Ironsyde sayd I haue taken vpon me with syre Persaunt of Inde and his bretheren to hold party ageynst my lord sir Launcelot and the knyghtes of that courte. And this haue I done for the loue of my lady Dame Lyones and you my lord sir Gareth. ye haue wel done said syr Gareth. But wete you wel ye shal be ful sore matched with the moost noble knyghtes of the world, therfor we must pursuie vs of goode knyghtes where we may gete them. That is wel said, said sir Persaunt and worshipfully. And soo the crye was made in England, Walis and scotland, Ireland, Cornewaille, & in alle the oute Iles and in bretayn, and in many coundreys that at the feest of our lady the as-sumpcion next comynge men shold come to the castel peryllous bessyde the yle of Auylion. And there al the knyghtes that ther shold haue the choyse whether them lyst to be on the one party with the knyghtes of the castel or on the other party with kynge Arthur.
And two monethes was to the daye that the turnement shold be, & so ther cam many good knyztes that were at her large and helde hem for the moost party aseynst kynge Arthur and his knyghtes of the round table, cam in the syde of them of the castel. For syr Epyn-ogrurs was the fyrst, and he was the kynges sone of Northumberland, & syr Palamydes the sarasyn was another, and syr Safere his broder, and syre Segwarydes his broder, but they were crystned, and syre Malegryne another, and syr Bryan des les Ielys a noble knyghte, and syr Grummore gummursum a good knyghte of Scotland, and syr Carados of the dolorous toure a noble knyghte and syr Turquyn his broder, and syr Arnold and syre Gauter two bretheren good knyghtes of Cornewaile, there cam syr Trystram de lyones, and with hym syr Dynadas the seneschal, and sir Saduk, but this syr Tristram was not at that tyme knyght of the table round, but he was one of the best knyghtes of the world. And soo all these noble knyghtes accompnayed hem with the lady of the castel and with the reed knyghte of the reed laundes, but as for sir Gareth he wold not take vpon hym more but as other meane knyghtes.

Capitulum xxvii.

And them the ther cam with kynge Arthur sir Gawayn, Agra-ueyne, Gaherys his bretheren. And thenne his newes syr Uwayn le blanche maynys, and syr Agluale, syr Tor, sir Percyuale de galys, and syre Lamerak de galis. Thenne came sir Launcelot du lake with his bretheren newes and cosyns as sir Lyonel, sir Ector de marys, syr bors de ganys and sir Galybodin, syre Galibud and many moo of syre Launcelots blood and syre Dynadan, sir la coot male tayle, his broder a good knyghte, and sir Sagramore a good knyght, And al the most party of the round table. Also ther cam with kynge Arthur these knyghtes, the kynge of Irelande, kynge Agwyasunce, and the kynge of Scotland, kynge Carados and kynge Uryens of the Ionde of gore and kynge Bagdemagus and his sone syr Melyaganus and syr Galahault the noble prync. Alle these kynes prynces and Eries Barons and other noble knyghtes, as syre Braundylas, syre Uwayne les aovertres, and syre kay, syr Bedeuere, syr Melyot de logrys syr Petypase of Wynkelsee, syr Godelake. alle these came with kynge Arthur and moo that can not ben reherced.

Now leue we of these kynes and knyghtes, and let vs speke of the grete araye that was made within the castel and aboute the castel for bothe partyes. the lady Dame Lyones ordeyned grete aray vpon her party for her noble knyghtes for al maner of lodgyng and vytsaille that cam by land & by water that ther lacked no thynge for her party nor for the other but there was plente to be had for gold and syluer for kynge Arthur and his knyghtes. And themne ther cam the herbegeurers from kynge Arthur for to herberowe hym & his kynes, dukes, Eries, Barons and knyghtes. And themne syr Gareth prayd dame Lyones and the reed knyghte of the reed laundes, and syr Persant and his broder, and syre Gryngamor that in no wyse ther shold none of them telle not his name and make no more of hym than of the least knyghte that there was, for he said I wille not be known of neyther more ne lesse, neyther at the begynnynge neyther at the endynge.

Thenne Dame Lyones said vnto syr Gareth, syre I wylle lene you a rynge, but I wold pray you as ye loue me hertely lete me haue it ageyn whanne the turnement is done. For that rynge encresseth my beaute moche more than it is of hym self. And the vertu of my rynge is that, that is grene it will torne to reed, and that is reed it wil torne in lykenes to grene. And that is blewe it wil torne to lykenes of whyte, and that is whyte it wil torne in lykenes to blewe, and so it wil doo of al manere of colours. Also who that bereth my rynge, shalle lese no blood, and for grete loue I wil gyue you thys rynge. Gramercy said syr Gareth myn own lady, for this rynge is passynge mete for me, for hit wille torne al manere of lykenes that I am in, and that shalle cause me that I shall not be known. Thenne syr Gryngamor gaf syr Gareth a bay courser that was a passyng good hors. Also he gafe hym good armoure and sure and a noble sword that somtyme syre Gryngamors fader wanne vpon an heten Tyraunt. And soo thus euery knyghte made hym redy to that turnement & kyng Arthur was comen two dayes to fore thassumption of our lady. And there was al maner of Royalte of al mynstralye, that myghte be founde. Also there cam quene Gweneuer and the quene of Orkeney syr Gareths moder. And vpon the assumpcion day, whanne masse and matyns were done there were herowdes with trompettes commaundmed to blowe to the feld. And soo there came oute syr Eypynogrus the kynges sone of Northumberland from the castel, and there encountred with hym syre Sagramor le desyris, and eyther of hem brake their spere to their handes. And thenne came in syre Palamydes oute of the Castel, and there encountred with hym Gawayne and eyther of hem smote other so hard that bothe the good knyghtes and their horses felle to the erthe. And thenne knyghtes of eyther party residuald their knyghtes. And thenne cam in syr Safere and syre Segwarydes, bretheren to syre Palamydes, and there encountred syr Agrausyne with syr Safere and syr Gaherys encountred with syre Segwarydes. So syr Safere smote doune Agrausyne syr Gawayns broder, and sir Segwarydes syr Saferes broder. And syr Malgryne a knyzt of the Castel encountred with syr Uwayne le blanche maynys. And there syre Uwayne gaf syr Malgryn a falle, that he had almost broke his neck.

THEENNE syr Bryan de les yles and Grummore grummorssum knyghtes of the Castel (encountred) with syre Aglouale and syre Tor smote douen syr Grumere Gromorson to the erth. Thenne cam in syr Carados of the dolorous toure & syr Turquyne knyghtes of the Castel, and there encoitred with hem syr Percyuaule de galys & syr Launcelot de galys, that were two bretheren. And there encountred syr Perceyuale with syre Caradus, and eyther brake their speres vnto their handes, & thenne syr Turquyn with syre Lamerak, and eyther of hem smote doune others hors and alle to the erthe, and eyther partyes rescuew other, and horsed them ageyn. And syr Arnold and syr Gautere knyghtes of the castel encountred with syre Braundyles and syr kay, and these four knyghtes encountred myghtely, and brake their speres to their handes. Thenne came in syr Trystram, syre Saduk, and syre Dynas knyghtes of the castel, and there encountred syr Trystram wyth syr Bedyuere, and there syr Bedyuere was smyten to the erthe bothe hors and man. And syr Saduk encountred with sir Patypase, and there syr Saduk was ouerthrown. And there Uwayne les auoutres smote doune syr Dynas the seneschal. Thenne came in syr Persaunt of Inde a knyght of the castel. And there encountred with hym syr Launcelot du lake, and there he smote syr Persaunts hors and man to the erthe. Thenne came syr Pertylope from the castel, and there encountred with hym syr Lyonel, and there syr Pertylope the grene knyght smote doune syr Lyonel broder to syr Launcelot. All this was marked by noble heroudes, who bare hym best, and their names. And thenne came in to the feld syre Perymones the grene knyght syr Persaunts broder that was a knyght of the Castel, and he encountred with syr Ector de marys, and eyther smote other so hard, that bothe their horses and they felle to the erthe. And thenne came in the reed knyght of the reed laundes and syr Gareth from the castel, and there encountred with hem syr Bors de ganys and syr Bleoberys, and there the reed knyghte and syr Bors smote other so hard that her speres brast and their horses felle groulynge to the erthe. Thenne syr Blamor brake his spere vpon syr Gareth, but of that stroke syr Blamor felle to the erthe. Whan syr Galyhondyn sawe that, he bad sir gareth kepe hym, & sire gareth smote hym to the erthe. Thenne sire Galyhud gate a spere to auenge his broder, & in the same wyse sir gareth serued hym, & sir Dunadan & his broder la cote male tayle, & sir Sagramor desirus, & sir Dodynas le saunege. All these he bare doun with one spere. Whan kyng Aguysauce of Irland sawe syr Gareth fare so, he merueilde what he myzt be y' one tyme semed grene & another tyme at his aseyne comyng he semed blewe. And thus at euery cource that he rode to and fro he chaunged his colour so that the myghte neyther kyng nor knyghte haue redy cognyssance of hym. Theyme syr Anguyssaunce the kyng of Irland encountrer with syr Gareth, and there syr Gareth smote hym from his hors sadyl and all. And theyme came kyng Caradus of Scotland and syr Gareth smote hym doun hors and man. And in the same wyse he serued kyng Uryens of the land of Gore. And theyme came in syr Bawdemagus, and syr Gareth smote hym doune hors and man to the erthe. And Bawdemagus some Melyganus brake a spere vpon sir Gareth myghtely and knyghtely. And theyme syr Galahaut the noble prynce cryed on hyghe knyghte with the many colours wel hast thou justed. Now make the redy that I maye juste with the. Syre Gareth herd hym, and he gat a grete spere, and soo they encountrer to gyder, and there the prynce brake his spere. But syr Gareth smote hym vpon the lyfte syde of the helme, that he relyd here and there, and he had fallen doune had not his men recouer hym. Soo god me help sayd kynge Arthur that same knyght with the many colours is a good knyghte, wherfor the kyng called vnto hym syr Launcelot and praid hym to encountrer with that knyghte. Syr said Launcelot I may wel fynde in my herte for to forbere hym as at this tyme, for he hath hadde travaill ynowh this day, & whan a good knyghte doth soo wel vpon somme day, it is no good knyghtes parte to lette hym of his worship. And namly whan he seeth a Knyght hath done soo grete labour, for peraduenture said syr Launcelot his quarel is here this day, & peraunentur he is best by loued with this lady of al that ben here, for I see wel, he payneth hym & enforceth hym to do grete dedes, & therfor said syr launcelot as for me this day he shall haue the honour, though it lay in my power to put hym fro it, I wold not.
Capitulum xxx.

Thenne whanne this was done, there was drawyng of swerdes. And thenne there began a sore turnement. And there dyd syr Lamerak merueyllous dedes of armes, & betwixe syr Lamerak and syre Ironsyde that was the reed knyghte of the reed laides there was strong batail, & betwix syre Palamides & Bleoberys there was a strong batail, & sir Gawayne and syr Trystram mette, and there syr Gawayne had the worse, for he pulled syre Gawayne from his hors. And there he was long vpon foote and defouled. Thenne cam in syr Launcelot and he smote syr Turquyne, and he hym, & thenne came syr Caradus his broder, and bothe at ones they assayled hym, & he as the moost noblest knyght of the world worshipfully fought with hem bothe, that al men wondred of the noblesse of syr launcelot. And thenne cam in syr Gareth and knewe that it was sir launcelot that fought with two peryllous knyghtes. And thenne syr Gareth came with his good hors and hurtled hem in sonder, & no stroke wold he smyte to syr Launcelot. that aspyed sir Launcelot & demed it shold be the good knyghte syre Gareth, & thenne syr Gareth rode here and there, & smote on the ryght hand & on the lyfte hand that all the folke myghte wel aspye where that he rode, and by fortune he mette with his broder syr Gawayn, and there he put syr Gawayne to the worse, for he put of his helme, and so he servied fye or syxe knyghtes of the rounde table that alle men said, he put hym in the most payne, and best he dyd his deuoyr. For whan syr Trystram beheld hym how he fyrst justed and after foughte so wel with a swerd, Thenne he rode vnto syr Ironsyde and to syre Persaunt of ynde and asked hem by their feythe, what maner a knyghte is yonder knyght that semeth in soo many dyuerse colours. Truly me semeth sayd Trystram that he putteth hym self in grete payne for he neuer ceaseth. Wote ye not what he is sayd syr Ironsyde. No sayd syr Trystram. thenne shal ye knowe that this is he that loueth the lady of the castel and she hym ageyne, and this is he that wanne me whan I byseged the lady of this castel, and this is he that wanne syr Persaunt of ynde, and his thre brothere. What is his name sayd syr Trystram and of what blood is he come. he was called in the courte of kyng Arthur Beaumays, but his ryst name is sir Gareth of Orkeney broder to sir Gawyn. by my hede said sir Trystram he is a good kniȝt and a bygge man of armes, & yf he be yong he shalle preue a ful noble knyghte. he is but a child they all saide & of syr Launcelot he was made knyzt, therfor he is mykel the better said Trystram. And thenne syr Trystram, syr Ironsayde, syr Persaunt and his broder rode to gyders for to helpe sir gareth, & thenne there were gyuen many strong strokes. And thenne syr Gareth rode oute on the one syde to amende his helme, & thenne said his dwerf take me your ryng that ye lese it not whyle that ye drynke. And so when he had dronken he gat on his helme, & egerly took his hors & rode in to the feld, & lefte his rynghe with his dwerf, and the dwerf was gladde the ryng was from hym, for thenne he wist wel he shold be knowen. And thenne when syr Gareth was in the feld alle folkes sawe hym wel, & playnly that he was in yelowe colours, & thence he rassyd of helmes & pulled doun knyghtes that kyng Arthur had merueyle what knyzt he was, for the kyng sawe by his here that it was the same knyght.

But by fore he was in so many colours and now he is but in one colour that is yelowe. Now goo said kyng Arthur vnto dyuerse heroudes and ryde aboute hym & aspye what maner knyght he is, for I haue speryd of many knyghtes this day that ben vpon his party, and all says they knowe hym not. And so an heroude rode syr Gareth as he coude, and there he sawe srynte aboute his helme in golde, This helme is syr Gareth of Orkeney. Thenhe the heroude cryd as he were wood, & many heroudes with hym, This is syre gareth of Orkeney in the yelowe armes that by all kynges and knyghtes of Arthurs beheld hym & wayted, & thenne they pressesd al to beholde hym, & euer the heroudes cryd this is syre gareth of Orkeney kyng Lots sone. and when syr gareth aspyd that he was discovered, then he doubled his strokes, & smote doune syr Sagramore & his broder sir gawayn. O broder saide sir gawayn I wende ye wolde not haue stryken me. so whan he herd hym say so he thrang here & there, & so with greteayne he got out of the prees, and there he mette with his dwerp. O boye said syr gareth thou hast begyled me foule this day that thou kepe my rynge. Gyue it me anone ageyn that I may hyde my body with al, and soo he tooke it hym. And thenne they all wist not where he was become, and syr gawayn had in maner aspyed where syr gareth rode, and them he rode after with alle his myghte. that aspyed syr gareth and rode lyghtely in to the forest that syr gawayn wist not where he was become. And whan syr gareth wyst that syr gawayn was past, he asked the dwerp of best councel. Syr said the dwerp, me semeth it were best now that ye are escaped fro spyeng that ye send my lady dame lyones her rynge. It is wel aduyed said syr gareth, now haue it here and bere it to her, And saye that I recomaunde me vnto her good grace, and saye her I will come whan I maye, and I pray her to be true and feythful to me as I wil be to her. Syr said the dwerp it shal be done as ye commaunde, and soo he rode his wyve and dyd his eraund vnto the lady. Thenne she said where is my knyghte syr gareth. Madame said the dwerp he bad me saye, that he wold not be long from you. And soo lyghtely the dwerp cam ageyn vnto syr gareth that wold ful feyne haue had a lodgyng, for he had nede to be repose. And thenne felle there a thondre and a rayne as heuyen and erthe shold goo to gyder. And syr gareth was not a lytyl wery, for of all that day he had but lytyl rest neythre his hors nor he. So this syr gareth rode soo longe in that forest vntyl the nyghte came. And eneit lyghtned and thondred as it had ben woode. At the last by fortune he came to a Castel, and there he herd the waytes vpon the wallys.
Capitulum xxxii.

Thenne syr Gareth rode vnto the barbycan of the castel, and praid the porter fayr to lete hym in to the castel. The porter ansuered vngoodely aseyne, and saide thow getest no lodgyng here. Fayr syr say not soo for I am a knyste of kynge Arthurs, & pray the lord or the lady of this castel to gyue me herberow for the loue of kynge Arthur. Thenne the porter wente vnto the duchesse, and told her how ther was a knyghte of kynge Arthurs wold haue herberowe. lete hym in said the duchesse, for I wille see that knyghte. And for kynge Arthurs sake he shalle not be herberoules. Thenne she yode vp in to a toure ouer the gate with grete torche lyght. Whan sir Gareth sawe that torche lyghte he cryed on hyhe whether thou be lord or lady, gyaunt or champyon, I take no force so that I may haue herberowe this nyghte, & yf hit so be that I must nedes fyghte, spare me not to morne when I haue restyd me, for bothe I and myn hors ben wery. Syr knyghte said the lady thou spekest knykhtely and boldly, but wete thou wel the lord of this castel loueth not kynge Arthur, nor none of his court, for my lord bact ever ben aseyne hym, and therfor thou were better not to come within this castel. For and thou come in this nyghte, thou must come in vnder sutha fourme that where someuer thou mete my lord by styz or by strete, thou must yelde the to hym as prysoner. Madame said syre Gareth what is your lord and what is his name. sir my lordes name is the duke de la rouse. Wel madame said syr Gareth I shal promyse yow in what place I mete your lord I shalle yelde me vnto hym and to his good grace with that I vnderstande he wille do me no harme. And yf I vnderstand that he wille I wil relese my self and I can with my sperke and my swerd. ye say wel said the duchesse, and thenne she lete the drawe brydye doune, and soo he rode in to the halle, and there he alyghte, and his hors was ledde in to a stable, & in the halle he vnarmed hym, & saide madame I will not oute of this halle thys nyghte. And whan it is daye lyght, lete see who wil haue adoo with me, he shal fynde me redy. Thenne was he sette vnto souper, and had many good dyshes.
thenne syr Gareth lyst wel to ete, and knyghtely he ete his mete; and egerly, there was many a fair lady by hym, & some said they never sawe a goodlyer man nor so wel of etynge. thenne they made hym passyng good chere, & shortly when he had souped his bedde was made there, so he rested hym al nyghte. And on the morne he herd masse & brake his fast & toke his leue at the duchesse, & at them al, & thanked her goodely of her lodging & of his good chere, & thenne she asked hym his name. Madame he saide truly my name is Gareth of Orkeney, & some men calle me Beaumayna. theñe knewe she wel it was the same knyght that fouzt for dame lyones. so sir Gareth departed & rode vp in to a montayne, & ther mette hym a knyghte, his name was syr Bendelayne and sayd to syr Gareth thou shalt not passe this way, for outhere thou shalt juste with me or els be my prysoner. Thenne wille I juste said syr Gareth. And soo they lette their horses renne, and there syr Gareth smote hym thorououte the body, and syr Bendalyne rode forth to his castel there besyde and there dyed. So syr gareth wold haue rested hym, and he cam rydyng to Bendalaynus castel. Thenne his knyghtes and seruauntes aspyd that it was he that had slayne their lord. Thenne they armed xx good men and cam oute and assailed syr gareth, and soo he had no sperre but his sword, and put his sheld afore hym, and there they braké their speres vpon hym, and they assailed hem passyngly sore. But euer syr gareth defened hym as a knyght.

Soo when they sawe that they myghte not overcume hym, they rode from hym, and took their councelyle to ase his hors, and soo they cam in vpon syr gareth, and with speres they slewe his hors, and thenne they assailed hym hard. But when he was on foote, there was none that he faughte but he gef him suche a buffet that he dyd neuer recouer. So he slewe hem by one and one tyll they were but four, and there they fledde, and sire gareth took a good hors that was one of theirs and rode his waie. Thenne he rode a geste pass til that he came to a castel and there he herd moche mornynge of ladys and gentylwymmen, so ther cam by hym a page. What noys is this said syr gareth that I here within this castel. Syre knyghte said the page here ben within this castel thyrty ladys and alle they be wydowes. For here is a knyght that wayteth dayly vpon this castel, and his name is the broun knyghte withoute pyte, and he is the perylloust knyghte that now luyeth. And therfor sir said the page I rede you flee. Nay said sir gareth I will not flee though thou be aferd of hym. And thenne the page sawe where came the broun knyghte, loo said the page yonder he cometh. lete me dele with him said syre gareth. And whan eyther of other had a syghte they lete theyr horses renne, and the broun knyghte brake his sperre and sir gareth smote hym thorou oute the body that he ouerthrew hym to the ground stark dede. So sir gareth rode in to the castel & praid the ladys y' he myxt repose hym. allas said the ladys ye may not be lodget here. make hym good chere said the page for this knyghte hath slayne your enemy. themne they al made hym good chere as laye in their power. But wete ye wel they maade hym good chere for they myghte none otherwyse doo for they were but pourre. And so on the morne he wente to mase, and there he sawe the thyrty ladys knele, and lay gownelyng vpon dyuerse tombes makyngre grete dole and sorowe. Thenne syr gareth wyl we\nen in\nthe tombes lay theirl orde. Payre ladys said syr gareth, ye must at the next feeste of Pentecost be at the court of kyngge Arthur, and saye that I syr gareth sente you thyder. We shal doo this said the ladys. Soo he departed, and by fortune he came to a moutayne, & there he found a goodely knyghte that bade hym abyde syr knyghte and juste with me. What are ye said syr gareth. My name is said he the duke de la rowse. A syr ye ar the same knyghte that I lodget ones in your Castel. And there I made promyse vnto your ladys that I shold yeke me vnto yow. A said the duke, ary thou that proud knyghte that proferest to fyghte with my knyghtes, therfore make the redy for I wil have adoo with you. Soo they let their horses renne, and ther syr gareth smote the duke doune from his hors. But the duke lyghtly assyded his hors, and dressid his shelde and drewe bys sword, and bad syr gareth alyghte and fyghte with
hym. Soo he dyd alyghte, and they dyd grete bataill to gyders more than an houre, and eyther hurte other ful sore. Att the last sir Gareth gat the duke to the erthe, and wold haue slayn hym, and thenne he yelde hym to hym. Thenne must ye goo said sir Gareth vnto syr Arthur my lord at the next feest and saye that I sir Gareth of Orkeney sente you vnto hym. hit shal be done said the duke, and I wil doo to yow homage and feaute with an C knytes with me, and alle the dayes of my lyf to doo you seruyse where ye wille commaunde me.

Capitulum xxxviii.

Soo the duke departed, and sir Gareth stode there alone and there he sawe an armed knyght comyng toward hym. Thenne syre Gareth toke the dukes sheld, and mounted vpon horsbak, and soo whoute bydying they ranne to gyder as it had ben the thonder. And there that knyxt hurte syr Gareth vnder the syde with his spere. And thenne they alyghte, and drewe their swerdes, and gaue grete strokes that the blood trayled to the ground. And soo they foughthe two houres. At the last ther came the damoysel Lynet that somme men calle the damoysel sauage, and she came rydyng vpon an ambelynge meule, and there she cryed al on hyghe, syr Gawayne syr Gawayne leue thy fyghtynge with thy broder syre Gareth. And whan he herd her saye soo he throwe aweye hya sheld and hya sword, and ranne to syre Gareth, and tooke hym in his armes, and sythen kneled doune and asked hym mercy. What are ye said syr Gareth that ryght now were soo stronge and soo myghty, and now so sodenly yelde you to me. O Gareth I am your broder syr Gawayn that for youre sake haue had grete soroe and labour. Thenne syr Gareth vnlace his helme, and kneypd doune to hym, and asked hym mercy. Thenne they rose both and embraced eyther other in their armes and wepte a grete wyle or they myghte speke, and eyther of them gaf other the pryce of the bataille. And there were many kynde words bitwene hem. Allas my faire broder said sir gawayn perde I owe of ryghte to worshippe you, and ye were not my broder, for ye haue worshipped kyng Arthur and all his courte, for ye haue sente me mo worshipful knyghtes this twelue moneth than syxe the best of the round table haue done excepte sir Launcelot. Thenne cam the damoysel saueage that was the lady Lynet that rode with sir gareth soo longe, and there she dyd staunche sir gareths woundes, and sir gawyns. Now what wille ye doo said the damoysel saueage, me semeth that it were wel do y' Arthur had wetyng of you both, for your horses are soo brysed that they may not bere. Now faire da-moysel said syr Gawayne, I praye you ryde vnto my lord myn vnkel kynge Arthur, and telle hym what aduenture is to me betyd here, and I suppose he wille not tary long. Thenne she tooke her meule and lyghtly she came to kyng Arthur, that was but two myle thena.
And whan she had told hym tydynges the kyng bad gete hym a palfroy. And whan he was vpon his bak he badde the lorde and ladyes come after who that wold, and there was sadelyng and brydelyng of quenes horses and prynces horses, & wel was hym that soonest myght be redy. Soo whan the kyng came there as they were he sawe syr Gawyn and syr Gareth sytte vpon a lytel hylle syde, & thenne the kynges auoyded his hors. And whanne he cam nyghe syre Gareth, he wold haue spoken but he myghte not, and therwith he sanke doune in a sowne for gladnesse, and soo they starte vnto theyr vnkyll, and reuyred hym of his good grace to be of good confort. Wete ye wel the kyng made grete ioye and many a pyteous complaynte he made to syr Gareth. And euer he wepte as he had ben a chyld. With that cam his moder the quene of Orkeney dame Morgause. And whan she sawe syr Gareth redely in the vysage she myghte not wepe but sodenyly felle doun in a sowne, and lay there a grete whyle lyke as she had ben dede. And thenne syr Gareth recomforted his moder in suche wyse that she re-couer and made good chere. Thenne the kyng com.maunded that al maner of knyghtes that were vnder his obeisance shold make their lodgyng ryght there for the loue of his neueues. And soo it was done and al manere of purueaunce purueyd that ther lacked nothyng that myghte be goten of tamenor wylde for gold or syluer.
And thenne by the meanes of the damoysel Saueage syr Gawayne and syr Gareth were heled of their woundes, and there they soiuerned eyght dayes. Thenne said kyng Arthur vnto the damoyesl saueage I merueylle that your syster Dame Liones cometh not here to me, and in espeycal that she cometh not to vysyte her knyghte my neuewe syre Gareth that hath had soo moche travaile for her loue. My lord said the damoyesl Lynet ye must of your good grace hold her excused. For she knoweth not that my lord syr Gareth is here. Go thene for her said kyngge Arthur that we may be apoynted what is best to (be) done accordyng to the plesyr of my newewe. Syr said the damoyesl that shal be done, and soo she rode vnto her syster. And as lyghtely as she myght made her redy & she cam on the morn with her broder syr Gryngamor, and with her xl knyxtes. And so when she was come she had alle the chere that myghte be done bothe of the kyng and of many other kynges and quenes.

Capitulum xxxv.

And amonge alle these lades she was named the fayrest and pyereles. Thenne whanne syr Gawayn sawe her, there was many a goodely loke and goodely wordes that alle men of worship had loye to beholde them. Thenne cam kyngge Arthur and many other kynges and dame Gweneuer & the quene of Orkeney. And there the kyng asked his neuew syre Gareth whether he wold haue that lady as peramour or to haue her to his wyf. My lord wete yow wel that I loue her aboue al lades lyuyng. Now fayre lady said kyng Arthur what say ye. Most noble kyng said dame Liones wete yow wel that my lord syr Gareth is to me more leuer to haue and welde as my husband than ony kyng or prynce that is crystned, and yf I maye not haue hym I promise yow I wylle neuer haue none. For my lord Arthur sayd dame Liones wete ye wel he is my fyrst loue and he shal be the laste. And yf ye wil suffre hym to haue his wyl and free choyse I dare saye he wylle haue me. That is trouthe said syr Gareth. And I haue not you and wely not you as my wyf, there shal neuer lady ne gentrywoman reioyce me. What neewewe said the kyngge is the wynde in that dore, for wete ye wel I wold not for the stynte of my croune to be causar to withdrawe your hertes. And wete ye wel ye can not loue so wel but I shal rather encrease hit than dysstrasse hit. And also ye shal haue my loue and my lordship in the yttermest wyse that may lye in my power. And in the same wyse said sir Gareths moder. thenne there was made a prouysyon for the day of maryge, and by the kynges aduyse it was prouyded that it shold be at Mychelmas folowynge at kynkenadon by the see syde, for ther is a plentyfull countrey. And soo it was cryed in al the places thurgh the roymme. And themne syr Gareth sent his somones to alle these knyghtes and laddyes that he had wonne in batail to fore that they shold be at his day of maryage at kynkenadon by the sandys. And themne dame Lyones and the damoysel Lynet with syr Gryngamor rode to theire castel, and a goodely and a rychy rynge she gaf to syr Gareth, and he gaf her another. And kyng Arthur gaf her a rychy bee of gold, and soo she departed, and kyng Arthur and his felauishp rode toward Kynkenadon, and syr Gareth broughte his lady on the way, & so cam to the kyng aseyne and rode wyth hym. Lord the grete chere that syr launcelot made of sir Gareth and he of hym, for there was neuer no knyght that syr gareth loued so wel as he dyd syr Launcelot, and euery for the most party he wold be in syr launcelots company, for after syr Gareth had aspyed sir Gawayns condycions he withdrew hym self fro his broder syr Gawayns felauishp, for he was vengeable, and where he hated he wold be avengyd with murther and that hated syr Gareth.

Capitulum xxxvi.

Soo hit drewe faste to Mychelmas, and thyder came dame Lyones the lady of the castel peryllous and her syster dame Lynet with syre gryngamor her broder with hem. For he had the conduyte of these laddyes. And there they were lodged at the deuyse of kyng Arthur. And vpon mychelmas day the Bishop of Caunterbury made the weddyng betwixe syr gareth and the lady Lyones with grete solempnyte, and kyng Arthur made gaherys to wedde the damoysel sauage, that was dame Lynet. And kyng Arthur made syr Agravayne to wedde dame Lyones nees a fayr lady, her name was dame Laurel. And so whan this solemnacion was done, themne came in the grene knyghte syr Pertylpe with thyrtty knyghtes, and there he dyd homage and feaute to syr gareth and these knyghte to hold of hym for euermore. Also sir Pertilope said I pray you that at this feest I maye be your chamberlayne. With a good wil said syr gareth, syth it lyketh you to take soo syimple an office. Thenne come in the reed knyghte with thre score knyghtes with hym, and dyde to syr Gareth homage and feaute, and alle tho knyghtes to hold of hym for euermore. And thenne this syr Perymonyes praiye sir gareth to graunte hym to be his chyef botteler at that hyghe feest.
I wil wel saide sir gareth that ye haue this office and it were better.
Thenne came in syr Persant of Inde with an C knyghte with hym, and there he dyd homage and feaute, and al his knyghtes shold doo hym seruyse, and hold their londes of hym for euer, and there he prayd syr Gareth to make hym his Sewar chyef at the feest. I will wel said syr Gareth that ye haue it & it were better. Thenne cam the duk de la rowse with an C knyghte with hym, and there he dyd homage and feaute to syr Gareth, and soo to hold theire londes of hym for euer. And he requyred syr Gareth that he myght serue hym of the wyn that day of that feest. I wil wel sayd syr Gareth and it were better. Thenne came in the reed knyhtes of the reed laundes that was syr Ironsyde, and he broughte with hym thre honderd knyghtes, and there he dyd homage & feaute, and al these knyghte to hold their landes of hym for euer. And thenne he asked syr Gareth to be his keruer. I will wel said syr Gareth and it please you. Thenne came in to the courte thyrtty lades, and alle they semed wydowes, and tho thyrtty lades broughte with hem many fayre gentylwymmen.
And alle they kneled doune at ones vnto kynge arthur and vnto syr Gareth, and there al tho lades told the kynge how syr Gareth delyuered hem from the dolorous toure, and slewe the broune knyghte withoute pyte. And therfore we and oure heyres for euermore wille doo homage vnto syr Gareth of Orkeney. So thenne the kynges and quenes, prynces, & erlys Barons and many bold knyghtes wente vnto mete, & well maye ye wete there were al maner of mete plentifuluely, alle manere rules and games with al manere of mynstralsay that was vsed in tho dayes. Also ther was grete justes thre dayes. But the kynge wold not suffre syre Gareth to juste by cause of his newe bryde, for as the frenshe book sayth that dame Lyones desyred of the kynge that none that were wedded shold juste at that feast. Soo the fyrst daye there justed sir lamerak de galys, for he overthrewe thrytty knyghtes, & did passyng merueillously dedes of armes, and thenne kynge Arthur made syr Persaunt and his two bretheren knyghtes of the round table to their lyues ende, and gaf hem greté londes. Also the second daye there justed Trystram best, and he overthrewe fouerty knyghtes, and dyd there merueillous dedes of armes. And there kynge Arthur made Ironsye that was the reed knyghte of the reed laundes a knyghte of the table round to his lyues ende, and gaf hym greté londes. Thé thyrday there justed syr launcelot du lake, and he overthrewe ffty knyghtes and dyd many merueillous dedes of armes that all men wondred on hym. And there kynge Arthur made the duke de la rouse a knyghte of the round table to his lyues ende, and gaf hym greté londes to spende. But when this justes were done, syr Lamerak and syr Trystram departed sodenly, & wold not be knowen, for the whiche kynge Arthur and all the court were sore displeasyd. And soo they helde the courte fouarty dayes with greté solemnnyte. And this syr Gareth was a noble knyghte and a wel rulyd, and fayre langaged.

Thus endeth this tale of syr Gareth of Orkney that wedded dame Lyones of the castel perillus. And also syr Sahryps wedded her syster dame Lyget, that was called the damosel sauncage. And syr Aiguayne wedded dame Laurel a fage lady and greté and myghty londes with greté eyphesse gaf with them kynge Arthur that rulyly they myght lyue tyl their lyues ende.

Here foloweth the bille book the which is the first book of sir Tristram de Lyones, & who was his fader & his moder, & how he was borne and fostered. And how he was made knyghte.
Capitulum primum.

It was a kyng that hyghte Melyodas, and he was lord and kynge of the countre of Lyonas. And this Melyodas was a lykely knyght as ony was that tyme lyuynge. And by fortune he wedded kynge Markys syste of Cornewaille. And she was called Elyzabeth that was callyd bothe good and fair. And at that tyme kynge Arthur regned, and he was hole kynge of England, Walys and Scotland and of many other roymemes how be it there were many kynges that were lordes of many countreyes, but alre they held their landes of kynge Arthur, for in Walys were two kynges, and in the north were many kynges. And in Cornewall and in the West were two kynges. Also in Irelan were two or thre kynges, and al were vnder the obeissance of kynge Arthur. So was the kynge of Fraunce and the kynge of Bretayn and all the lordshippes vnto Rome. So whan this kynge Melyodas hadde ben with his wyf, within a whyle she waxid grete with child and she was a ful meke lady, and wel she loued her lord, & he her augeyne, soo there was grete ioye betwixe them. Thenne ther was a lady in that countrye that had loued kyng Melyodas longe, and by no meane she neuer coude gete his loue thersore she lete ordeyne vpon a day as kyng Melyodas rode on huntynge, for he was a grete chacer, and there by an enchauntelement she made hym chase an herte by hym selfe alone, til that he came to an old Castel, and there anone he was taken prysoner by the lady that hym loued. Whanne Elyzabeth kyng Melyodas myst her lord, and she was nyghe oute of her wytte and also as grete with child as she was she took a gentylwoman with her, and ranne in to the forest to seke her lord.

And whanne she was ferre in the forest she myghte no ferther for she byganne to trasaille fast of her child. And she had many grymly throwes, her gentylwoman halp her alle that she myghte. And soo by myracle of oure lady of beuon she was deluelyd with grete paynes. But she had taken suche cold for the defaute of helpe that depe draughtes of deth toke her, that nedes she must dye and deparate oute of this world, ther was none other bote. And whanne this quene Elyzabeth sawe that ther was none other bote, thenne she made grete dole, and said vnto her gentylwoman, whan ye see my lord kyng Melyodas recommannde me vnto hym, and telle hym what paynes I endure here for his loue, and how I must dye here for his sake for defaute of good helpe, and lete hym wete that I am ful sory to deparate out of this world fro hym, therfor pray hym to be frende to my soule.

Now lete me see my lytel child, for whome I haue had alle this sorowe. And whanne she sawe hym she said thus, A my lytel sone thou hast murthered thy moder, and therfore I suppose thou that art a murtherer soo yong, thou art fullylykyed to be a manly man in thyng age. And by cause I shal dye of the byrthe of the, I charge the gentylwoman, that thou pray my lord kyng Melyodas that when he is crystned lete calle hym Trystram that is as moch to saye, as a sorrowful byrthe. And ther with this quene gafe vp the ghoost and dyed. Thenne the gentylwoman leyd her vnder an vmbre of a grete tree, and thenne she lapped the chylde as well as she myght for cold. Ryghte soo ther came the Barons folowynge after the quene.
And when they sawe that she was dede, and vnderstood none other but the kyng was destroyed.

Thenne certayne of them wold haue slayne the child, by cause they wold haue ben lorde of the countrey of Lyonas. But thenne thorou the faire speche of the gentylwoman, and by the meanes that she made, the moost party of the Barons wold not assente ther to. And thenne they lete carry home the dede quene, and moche dole was made for her. Thenne this meane whyle Merlyn deluyerd kyng Me-lyodas out of pryson on the morn after his quene was dede. And so when the kyng was come home, the moost party of the barons made grete ioye. But the sorou that the kyng made for his quene that myghte no tong telle.

Soo thenne the kyng lete entere her rychely, and after he lete crystene his child as his wyf had commaundad afore her deth. And thenne he lete calle hym Trystram the sorowful borne child. Then the kyng Meelyodas endure swenen yeres withoute a wyf. And ale this tyne Trystram was nourysshad wel. Thenne hit befelle that kyng Meelyodas wedded kyng Howels daughter of Bretayne, and anone she hadde children of kyng Meelyodas, thenne was he hey and wrothe, that her children shold not reioyce the Countrey of Lyonas, wherfor this quene ordeyned for to poysone yong Tristram. So she lete poysone be put in a pyece of syluer in the chamber where as Trystram and her children were to gyders, ynto that entente that whanne Trystram were thursty he shold drynke that drynke. And so hit felle vpon a daye the quenes sonne as he was in that chamber, aspyed the pyece with poysone, and he wende hit hadde ben good drynke, and by cause the child was thursty he tooke the pyece with poysone and dranke frely, and there with al sodenly the child brast & was dede. Whanne the quene Melyodas wzyst of the dethe of her sone wete ye wel that she was hey. But yet the kyng vnderstode no thynge of her treason. Not withstandynge the quene wold not leue this, but efte she lete ordeyne more poysone, and putte hit in a pyece. And by fortune kyng Melyodas her husband fond the pyece with wyn where was the poysen, and he that was moche thursty took the pyece for to drynyte ther outhe. And as he wold haue dronken thereof, the Queene aspyed hym, and thenne she ranne vnto hym, and pulled the pyece from hym sodenly. The kyng merueilled why she dyd soo, and remembryd hym how her sone was sodenly slain with poysen. And thenne he took her by the hand and sayd, thou fals traitresse thou shalt teile me what manere of drynke this is, or els I shall see the. And ther with he pulled outhe his swerd, and sware a grete othe that he shold alee her, but yf she told hym trouthe. A mercy my lord sayde she, and I shall teile you alle. And thenne she told hym why she wold haue slayne Trystram, by cause her chylde ren shold rejoyce his land. Wel sayd kyng Melyodas, and therfor shal ye haue the lawe. And soo she was damnyd by the assente of the Barons to be brent, and thenne was ther made a grete fyre, & ryght as she was at the fyre to take her execution, yong Trystram knelyd afore kyng Melyodas, and besought hym to gyue hym a bone. I wyll wel sayd the kyng aseyene. Thenne saide yonge Trystram gyue me the lyf of thy quene my stepmoder. That is vnryghtfully asked sayd kyng Melyodas, for thou oughte of ryght to hate her, for she wold haue slayne the with that poysen and she myghte haue hadde her wille. And for thy sake moost is my cause that she sholde dye. Syr saide Trystram as for that I bysecche you of your mercy that ye wille forgyme hit her. And as for my parte god forgyme it her and I doo, and soo moche it lyked your hyvenes to graunte me my bone, for goddes loue I requeyre you hold your promise. Sythen hit is soo said the kyng I wille that ye haue her lyf, thenne said the kyng I gyue her to you, and go ye to the fyre and take her, and doo with her what ye wylle. Soo syre Trystram wente to the fyre, and by the commandement of the kyng deleyuerd her from the dethe. But after that kyng Melvodos wold neuer haue adoo with her as at bedde and borde. But by the good means of yonge Trystram he made the kyng and her accorded. But thenne the kyng wold not suffre yonge Trystram to abyde no lenger in his courte.
Capitulum iii.

And thenne he lete ordeyne a gentleman that was wel lerned and taughte, his name was gouernayle, and thenne he sente yonge Trystram with Gouernayle in to Fraunce to lerne the langage, and nurture and dedes of armes. And there was Trystram more than seuen yeres.

And thenne whanne he wel couthe speke the langage and hadde lerned alle that he myght lerne in that countreyes, thenne he came home to his fader kyngge Melyodas ageyne, and so Trystram lerned to be an harper passyngge alle other that there was none suche called in no countrey, and soo in harpynge & on Instrumentys of musyke he applyed hym in his yongthfe for to lerne. And after as he grewed in myght and strengthe he laboured euer in huntynge and in haukyngge soo that neuer gentleman more that euer we herd rede of. And as the book sayth, he beganne good mesures of blowyng of beestes of venery and beestes of chace, and alle manere of vermayns, and alle these termes we haue yet of haukyng and huntyng. And therfore the book of venery, of haukyngge and huntyngge is called the book of syr Trystram. Wherfor as me semeth alle gentleymen that ben other armes oughte of ryght to honoure syre Trystram for the goodly termes that gentilmen haue and vse, and shalle to the daye of dome, that there by in a maner alle men of worship maye disseuer a gentleman fro a yoman, and from a yoman a vylayne. For he that gentyl is wylle drawe hym vnto gentil tatches, and to folowe the customes of noble gentleymen. Thus syr Trystram endured in Cornewaile vntyl he was bygge, and stronge, of the age of xviii yeres. And thenne the kyngge Melyodas had grete ioye of syr Trystram, and soo had the quene his wyfe. For euer after in her lyff by cause syre Trystram saued her from the fyre she dyd neuer hate hym more after, but loued hym euer after, and gaf Trystram many grete yeftes for euery estate loued hym, where that he wente.

Thenne it befelle that kyng Anguysehe of Irelond, sente vnto kyng Mareke of Cornewale for his trouage that Cornewale had payed many wynters. And alle that tyme kyng Mareke was behynde of the trouage for seuen yeres. And kyng Mareke and his Barons gaf vnto the messager of Irelond these wordes and answere that they wold none paye, and bad the messagyer goo vnto his Kynge Anguysehe, and telle hym we wille paye hym no trouage, but telle youre lord, and he wille alwayes haue trouage of vs of Cornewale, bydde hym sende a trusty knyghte of his land, that wille fyghte for his ryght, and we shalle fynde another for to defende oure ryght. With this answere the messagers departed in to Irelond. And whanne kyng Anguysehe vnderstood the answere of the messagers, he was wonderly wroth. And thenne he calyld vnto hym syr Marhaus the good knyght that was nobly preued, and a knyghte of the table round. And this Marhaus was broder vnto the queene of Irelond. Thenne the kyng seyd thus, Fayre broder sir Marhaus I praye yow goo in to Cornewale for my sake and do bataille for our trouage that of ryght we oughte to haue, and what someuer ye spende ye shalle haue sufficiently more than ye shal nede. Syre seide Marhaus wete ye wel that I shalle not be lothe to doo bataille in the ryght of you and your land with the best knyghte of the table rounde, for I knowe them for the moost party what ben their dedes, and for to auance my dedes and to encrease my worship I wylle ryght gladly goo vnto thys iourneye for oure ryghte.

Soo in alle haste there was made pursuance for syr Marhaus, and he hadde al thynge that to hym neded, and soo he departe out of Irelond, and arryued vp in Cornewale euyn fast by the castel of Tynsalig. And whan kyng Mareke vnderstood that he was there arryued to fyghte for Irelond. Thenne made kyng Mareke grete sorow whan he vnderstood that the good and noble knyghte sire Marhaus was come. For they knew no knyght that durste have adoo with hym. For at that tyme syre Marhaus was called one of the famosest and renowned knyghtes of the world.
And thus syre Marhaus abode in the see, and every daye he sente vnto kyngge Marke for to paye the truage that was behynde of seuen yere, outher els to fynde a knyght to fyghte with hym for the truage. This maner of message syre Marhaus sente dayly vnto kyngge Marke. Thenne they of Cornewayle lete make cryes in euery place that what knyght wold fyghte for to saue the truage of Cornewaile he sholde be rewarded soo that he sholde fare the better the terme of hys lyf. Thenne some of the Barons sayde to kyngge Marke, and counseiled hym to sende to the courte of Kyngge Arthur for to seke syre Launcelot du lake that was that tyme named for the merueilloust Knyght of alle the worlde. Thenne there were somme other Barons that counceyld the Kyngge not to doo soo & said that it was laboure in vayn, by cause syr Marhaus was a knyght of the round table, therefor ony of hem will be loth to haue adoo with other, but yf hit were ony knyght at his owne request wold fyghte dysguysed and unnownen. Soo the kynge and alle his barons assented that it was no bote to seke ony knyght of the round table. This meane whyte camie the langage and the noyse vnto kyngge Meliodas hou that sire Marhaus abode bataille faste by Tyntagil. And how kyng Mark couthe fynde no maner knyghte to fyghte for hym. Whan yong Trystram herd of thys, he was wrothe and sore ashamed that ther durst no knyghte in Cornewaile haue adoo with syr Marhaus of Irland.

There with al Trystram wente vnto his fader Kyngge Meliodas and asked hym council what was best to doo for to recover Cornewaile from truage. For as me semeth said sir Tristram it were shame that syr Marhaus the quenes broder of Irland shold goo awaye onles that he were foughten with alle. As for that syde kyng Meliodas wete you wel some Tristram that syre Marhaus is called one of the best knyghtes of the world and knyghte of the table round. And therefor I knowe no knyghte in this countre that is able to matche with hym. Allas saide syre Tristram that I am not made knyght.
And yf sir Marhaus shold thus departe in to Irland, god lete me neuer haue worship and I were made knyght I shold matche hym. And syr said Trystram I pray you gyue me leue to ryde to kynge Mark, and soo ye be not displeasyd, of kynge Mark wille I be made Knyght. I will wel saide kynge Melyodas that ye be ruled as your courage wille rule you.

Thenne sir Trystram thanked his fader moche. And thenne he made hym redy to ryde in to Cornewaile. In the meane wyle there came a message with letters of louse fro kynge Faramon of Fraunces daughter vnto syre Trystram that were ful pyteous letters, & in them were wryten many complayntes of louse, but syre Tristram had no joye of her letters nor regard vnto her. Also she sente hym a lytel bracket that was passynga fayre. But whan the kynge doughter wnderstood that syre Trystram wold not louse her, as the booke sayth, she dyed for sorou. And thenne the same squire that broughte the letter and the bracket came ageyne vnto syr Trystram, as after ye shalle here in the tale. Soo this yonge syre Trystram rode vnto his eme kynge Marke of Cornewayle. And whanne he came there, he herd say that ther wold no knyghte fyghte with syre Marhaus. Thenne yede sir Tristram vnto his eme and sayd, syre yf ye wyll gyue me thordre of knyghthode, I wille doo batayle with syr Marhaus. What are ye said the kynge and from whens be ye comen. Sir said Trystram I come fro kynge Melyodas that welded your syster and a gentylman wete ye wel I am.

Kynge Marke behelde sir Trystram and saue that he was but a yonge man of age, but he was passyngly wel maade and bygge. Faire syre said the kynge what is youre name and where were ye borne. Syre sayd he ageyne, my name is Trystram, and in the countreye of Lyonses was I borne. Ye saye wel said the kynge, and yf ye wille doo this batayll I shalle make yow knyghte. Therfore I come to you sayd syre Tristram and for none other cause.

But thenne kynge Marke made hym knyghte. And there with al anone as he had made hym knyghte he sente a message vnto syre Marhaus with letters that said, that he hadde fonde a yonge knyghte redy for to take the bataile to the vtermest, hit may wel be said syr Marhaus. But telle kynge Marke I wille not fyghte with no knyghte but he be of blood royal, that is to saye, outher kynes sone outher quenes sone borne of a pynce or pyncesse.

Whanne Kynge Marke vnderstood that, he sente for syre Trys-tram de lyones and tolde hym what was the anser of syr Marhaus.
Thenne sayd syre Trystram sythen that he seyth soo, lete hym wete that I am comen of fader syde and moder syde of as noble blood as he is. For syre now shalle ye knowe that I am kynge Melyodas sone borne of youre own syster dame Elyzabeth that dyed in the forest in the byrthe of me. O Jhesu said kynge Mark ye are welcome faire neewe to me. Thenne in alle the haste the kynge lete horse syr Tristram and arme hym in the best maner that myghte be had or goten for gold or syluer. And thenne kynge Marke sente vnsto sir Marhaus, and dyd hym to wete that a better born mā tham he was hym self shold fyghte with hym, and his name is sir Tristram de lyonas, goten of kynge Melyodas, and borne of kynge Markes syster. Thenne was sir Marhaus glad and blythe that he shold fyghte with suche a gentylman, and soo by the assente of kynge Mark and of syr Marhaus they lete ordeyne that they shold fyghte within an Iland nyghe syr Marhaus shyppes, and soo was syr Trys-tram putte in to a vessel bothe his hors and he and all that to hym longed bothe for his body and for his hors. Syre Trystram lacked no thynge. And whan kynge Marke and his Barons of Cornwaille beheld how yonge syr Trystram departed with suche a cariage to fyghte for the ryghte of Cornwaille, there was neyther man ne woman of worship but they wepte to see and vnderstande soo yonge a knyght to jeoparde hym self for their ryghte.

Capitulum sextum.

Soo to shortern this tale, whan syr Trystram was arryued within the Iland, he loked to the fether syde, & there he sawe at an anker syxe shippes nyghe to the land, and vnder the shadowe of the shippes vpon the land, there houed the noble knyghte syr Marhaus of Irland.
Thenne syr Trystram commaunded his seruaunt gouernail to brynge his hors to the land and dresse his harneis at al manere of ryghtes.
And themen when he had soo done, he mounted vpon his hors.
And when he was in his sadel wel apparaile, & his shelde dressid: vpon his sholde, Trystram asked Gouernayle where is this knyghte that I shal haue adoo with alle. Syre sayd Gouernaile, see ye hym not, I wende ye had sene hym, yonder he houeth vnder the vmbre of his shippes on horsbak with his spere in his hand and his sheld vpon his sholde. That is trouthe sayd the noble knyght syre Trystrarn, now I see hym wel ymouz. Thenne he commaundid his ser-uaunt Gouernayle to goo to his vesseail aseyne, and commaunde me vnto myne eme kynge Marke, and praye hym, yf that I be slayn in this battaille for to entere my body as hym semed best, & as for me lete hym wete that I will neuer yelde me for cowardys, and yf I be slayne and flee not, thenne they haue lost no trusaige for me. And yf soo be that I flee or yelde me as recreait, bydde myn eme neuer bery me in Crysten beryels. And upon thy lyf said syr Trystram to Gouernayle, come thou not nyghe this Ilande tyel that thou see ouercomen or slayne, or els that I wynnne yonder knyght, soo eyther departed from other sore wepynge.

Capitulum septimum.

And themen syr Marhaus auyseyd syr Trystram and said thus, yonge knyght syr Trystram what dost thou here, me sore repenteeth of thy courage, for wete thou wel I haue ben assayed, and the best knyghtes of this land haue ben assayed of my hand. And also I haue matched with the best knyghtes of the world, and therfor by my counseile retorne aseyne vnto thy vesseail. And faire knyght and wel preued knyght said syre Trystram thou shalt wel wete I maye not forsake the in this quarel, for I am for thy sake made knyght. And thou shalt wel wete that I am a kynges sone born and goten vpon a queene, and suche promyse I haue made att my newes request and myn owne sekyng that I shalles fyghte with the vnto the vternest, and deluyer Cornewaile from the old truage. And also wete thou wle syr Marhaus, that this is the grettest cause that thou couragest me to haue adoo with the. For thou art called one of the moost renoumed knyghtes of the world, and by cause of that noyse and fame, that thou hast, thou gyuest me courage to haue adoo with the, for neuer yet was I preued with good knyghte. And sythen I toke the ordre of knyghthode this day, I am wel plesyd that I maye haue adoo with so good a knyght as thou arte. And now wete thou wel syr Marhaus that I caste me to gete worship on thy body. And yf that I be not preued, I trust to god that I shal be worshipfully preued vpon thy body, and to delyuer the countrey of Cornwaille for euer fro al maner of trusage from Irland for euer. Whanne syr Marhaus had herde hym saye what he wold, he saide thenne thus ageyn, Fair Knyght sythen it is soo that thou castest to wynne worship of me, I lete the wete, worship may thou none lese by me yf thou mayst stande me thre strokes, for I lete the wete, for my noble dedes preued and sene, Kyng Arthur made me knyghte of the table round. Thenne they beganne to feutre theyre speres, and they mette soo fyeraly to gyders that they smote eyther other doune, both hors and all. But syr Marhaus smote syr Trystram a grete wunde in the syde with his spere, & thenne they auoyded their horses, and pulled oute their swerdes, and threwe their sheldes afore them. And thenne they lashed to gyders as men that were wyld and courageous.
And whan they hadde sryken soo to gyder longe, thenne they lette her strokes, and foyned at their brethren and yvsours, & when they sawe that that myght not preuyle them, thene they hurtled to gyders lyke rammes to bere eyther other doune. thus they fought stylle more than half a day, and gyder were wounded passyng sore, that the blood ranne doune freshely fro them vpon the ground. By thenne syr Trystram waxed more fresser, than syr Marhaus and better wynded and bygger, and with a myghty stroke he smote syr Mar-haus vpon the helme suche a buffet that hit went throu his helme, and throu the cöyfe of stele and throu the brayn pan, and the sward stak soo fast in the helme and in his brayn pan that sir Trys-tram pulled thryes at his sward or euer he myght pull it out from his hede, & there Marhaus felle doun on his knees the edge of Tris-trams sward left in his brayne pan. And sodenly syr Marhaus rose grouelynge and threwe his sward and his sheld from hym, and soo ranne to his shippes and fledde his waye, and sir Tristram hadde euer his sheld e and his sword. And when sir Tristram sawe sir Marhaus withdrawe hym, he said A sir knyght of the rooud table why withdrawest thou the, thou dost thy selfe and thy kyn grete shame, for I am but a yong Knyghte, or now I was neuer preued, and rather than I shold withdrawe me from the, I had rather be hewen in C pyeces. Syr Marhaus ansuerd no worde but yee his waye sore gronyge. Well sir knyght said sir Tristram I promyee the thy suerd and thy sheld shal be myn, and thy sheld shalle I were in al places where I ryde on myn adventyures and in the syghte of kyng Arthur and alle the round table.

Capitulum viii.

Axxon sir Marhaus and his fealushe departed in to Irlan. And as soone as he came to the kynges his broder, he lete serche his woundes. And when his hede was serched, a pyece of syre Trystrams sword was founden therin, and myghte neuer be had oute of his hede for no surgeons, and soo he dyed of syr Trystrams sword, and that pyece of the sword the quene his syster kepte hit for euer wyth her, for she thoughte to be reuengyd and she myghte.

Now torne we ageynse vnto syr Trystram, that was sore wounded, and ful sore bled that he myz not withyn a lytel whyle when he had taken cold vnethe stere hym of his lymmes. And thene he sette hym doune softlye vpon a lytel hylle, and bledde fast. Thennne anone came Gouerneale his man with his vessell. And the kynges and his barons came with procession ageynst hym. And when he was come vnto the land, Kyngke Marke toke hym in his armes, and the kynges and sir Dynas the senescal ladde syr Tristram in to the castel of Tyntygal. And thennne he was seached in the best maner, and leid in his bedde. And when kyngke Marke sawe his wounds, he wepte hertely and soo dyd alle his lorde. So god me helpe said kyng Mark I wolde not for alle my landes that my neuwe dyed. Soo syr Trystram laye there a moneth and more, and euer he was lyke to deye of that stroke that sir Marhaus smote hym fyrest with the spere. For as the Frenashe book saith, the spere hede was euenymed that syr Trystram myghte not be hole. Thenne was kynge Mark and alle his barons passynge heuy. For they demed none other, but that syr Trystram shold ne reover. Thenne the kynge lete sende after alle manere of leches & surgens bothe vnto men and wymmen, and there was none, that wold behote hym the lyf. Thenne came there a lady that was a ryght wyse lady, & she said playnly vnto kyng mark and to sir Trystram and to alle his barons that he shold neuer be hole, but yf sire Trystram wente in the same countrey that the venym came fro, and in that countrey shold he be holpen or els neuer. Thus said the lady vnto the Kynge. Whan kynge Marke understood that, he lete puruye for syr Trystram a faire vessel, wel vytailed, and therin was put syr Trystram and gouernail with hym, and sir Tristram toke his harp with hym, and soo he was putte in to the see to sayle in to Irland, and soo by good fortune he arryued vp in Irland even fast by a castel where the Kynge and the quene was, and at his arrysayl he sat and harped in his bedde a mery lay suche one herd they neuer none in Irland afore that tymne.

And whan it was told the Kyng and the quene of suche a Knyght that was suche an harper, anone the Kyng sente for hym, and lete serche his woundes, and thenne asked hym his name, thenne he ansuered I am of the countrey of Lyonas, & my name is Tramtaryst that thus was wounded in a bataille as I fought for a ladyes ryght. So god me help said kyng Anguysehe ye shal haue all the helpe in this land that ye may haue here. But I lete you wete in Cornwall I had a grete losse, as euer hadde kyngye, for there I lost the best knyghte of the world, his name was Marhaus a ful noble knyghte and Knyght of the table round, and there he told syr Trystra wherefore syr Marhaus was slayne. Syr Trystram made semblaunt as he had ben sory, and better knewe he how hit was than the kynge.

Thenne the kyng for grete fauoure maade Tramtryst to be put in his doughters ward and kepyng by cause she was a noble surgeo. And whan she had serched hym, she fonde in the bottome of his wound that therin was poysen, and soo she heled hym within a whyle, and therfore Tramtryst cast grete loue to la beale Isoud, for she was at that tym the fairest mayde and lady of the worlde. And there Tramtryst lerned her to harpe, and she beganne to haue a grete fantasye vnto hym. And at that tym sir Palamydes the sarasy was in that countrey and wel chersshed with the kyng and the queene. And euerey day syr Palamydes drewe vnto la beale Isoud, and proffered her many yeftes, for he loued her passyngly wel. Al that aspyed Tramtryst, and ful wel knewe he syr Palamydes for a noble knyght and a myghty man. And wete ye wel syr Tramtryst had grete despynete at syr palomydes, for la beale Isoud told Tramtryst that Palamydes was in wylle to be crystened for her sake. Thus was ther grete enuy betwixe Tramtryst and syr Palamydes. Thenne hit befelle that kyng Anguyshe lete crye a grete justes and a grete turnement for a lady that was called the lady of the laundes, and she was nyghe cousin vnto the kyng. And what man wanne her, thre dayes after he shold wedde her and haue alle her landes. This crye was made in England, Walys, Scotland, and also in Fraunce and in Bretayne. It befelle vpon a day la beale Isoud came vnto syr Tramtryst and told hym of this turnement, he answerd and sayd fayr lady I am but a feble knyghte, and but late I had ben dede, had not your good ladyship ben. Now fayre lady what wold ye I shold doo in this matere. Wel ye wote my lady that I maye not juste. A Tramtryst said la beale Isoud why wille ye not haue ado at that turnement, wel I wote syr Palamydes shall be there, and to doo what he maye. And therfore Tramtryst I pray you for to be there, for els syr Palamydes is lyke to wynne the degree. Madame said Tramtryst as for that, it may be soo, for he is a proued knyght, and I am but a yong knyght and late made, and the fyrst bataille that I dyd it mysshapped me to be sore wounded as ye see. But and I wyat ye wold be my better lady, at that turnement I will be so that ye wille kepe my counseil and lete no creature haue knouleche that I shalle Juste but your self, and suche as ye wil to kepe your councell, my poure persone shall I jeopardhe there for your sake, that persuentur sir Palamydes shal knowe whan that I come. Therto said la beale Isoud do your best & as I can said la beale Isoud I shal pursueye hors and armour for you at my deuyse. as ye will soo be hit said syr Trætrist, I wille be at your comandement. So at the day of Justes, ther cam sir Palamydes with a black sheld, & he overthrw many knyghtes that alle the peple had merueylye of hym. For he putte to the worse syr Gawayne, Gaherya, Agausayn, Bagdemagus, kay, Dodys le saueage, Sagramor le desyrus, Gumret le petyte, and Gryfflet le fysye de dieu. Alle these the fyrste daye syr Palamydes strake doune to the erthe. And thenne alle maner of knyghtes were adred of sir Palamydes and many called hym the knyght with the black shelds. Soo that day syre Palamydes had grete worship. Thenne cam kynge Anguyshe vnto Tramtryst, and asked hym why he wold not juste. Syr he said I was but late hurte, and as yet I dare not aventure me. Thenne came there the same squire that was sente from the kynges daughter of Fraunce, vnto syr Trystram. And whanne he had aspyed syre Trystræ he felle flat to his feete. Alle that aspyed la Beale Isoud, what cortosye the squier made vnto syr Trystram. And therwith al sodenly syr Trystram ranne vnto his squier whose name was Hebes le renoumes, and praid hym hertely in noo wyse to telle his name. Syr said Hebes I wille not discouer your name, but yf ye commaunde me.

Thenne syr Trystram asked hym what he dyd in those countrieves, syr he sayd, I came hyder with syr Gawayen for to be made knyght. And yf it please you of your handes that I may be made knyghte. Awaitie vpon me as to morn secretly, and in the feeld I shal make you a knyghte. Themhe la beale Isoud grete suspecyon vnto Tramtryst that he was some man of worship proud, and ther with she comforted her self, and cast more loue vnto hym than she had done tofore. And soo on the morne syr Palamydes maade hym redy to come in to the feld as he dyd the fyrst day. And there he smote doune the kynge with the C knyghtes and the kynge of Scottes. Thenne had la beale Isoud ordeyned and wel arrayed syr Trystram in whyte hors and harneis. And ryght soo she lete putte hym oute at a preuy posterne, & soo he came in to the feld as it had ben a bryght angel. And anone syr Palamydes aspyed hym, and ther with he feutrid a spere vnto syr Tramtryst, and he ageyne vnto hym. And there syr Trystram smote doune syr Palamydes vnto the erth. Thanne there was a grete noyse of peple, some sayd, syre Palamydes hadde a falle, some said the knyght with the blak sheede had a falle. And wete you wel la beale Isoud was passyng gladde. And thenne sire Gawayne and his felawes ix had merueille what knyghte it myght be that had smytten doune syr Palamydes. Thenne wold there none juste with Tramtryst, but alle that there were forsoke hym, moost & lest. Thenne syr Trystram made Hebes a knyght, and caused hym to put hym self forthe, and dyd ryght wel that day. So after syr Hebes held hym wyth syr Trystram. And when syre Palamydes had recuyed this falle, wete ye wel that he was sore ashamed. And as pryuely as he myght, he withdrew hym oute of the feld. Alle that aspyed syre Trystram, and lyghtly he rode after syre Palamydes and ouertoke hym, and badde hym tore, for better he wold assaye hym, or euer he departed. Thanne syr Palamydes torned hym and eyther lashed at other with their swerdes. But at the fyreste stroke syr Trystram smote doune Palamydes, and gaf hym suche a stroke vpon the hede that he felle to the erthe. Soo thenne Tristram badde yelde hym, and doo his commandement or els he wold alee hym. Whan syre Palamydes beheld his countenaunce, he drede his buffets soo, that he graunted al his askynes. Wel said, said sir Tristram, this shall be your charge. Fyrst vpon payne of your lyf that ye forsake my lady la beale Isoud, and in no maner wyse that ye drawe not to her. Also this twelve moneth and a day, that ye here none armour nor none harneis of werre. Now promyse me this or here shal thou dye. Alas saide Palamydes for euer am I ashamed. Thenne he sware as syr Trystram hadde commaunded hym. Thenne for despyte and anger, syre Palamydes cutte of his harneis, and threwe them awhyte. And soo syr Trystram torned agyne to the Castel where was la beale Isoud, and by the weye he mete with a damoysel that asked after syre launcelot that wanne the dolorous gard worshipfully, & this damoysel asked syr Trystram what he was. For it was tolde her that it was he that smote doune syr Palamydes, by whom the x knyghtes of kynge Arthurs were smyten doune. Thenne the damoysel prayd syr Trystram to telle her what he was. And whethere that he were syr Launcelot du lake, for she demyd that there was no knyght in the world myghte do suche dedes of armes, but yf it were Launcelot. Fayre damoysel sayd syr Trystram wete ye wel that I am not syr launcelot for I was neuer of suche prowesse, but in god is al that he maye make me as good a knyght as the good knyght sir launcelot. Now gentyl knyght said she, put vp thy vysure, & whan she beheld his vysage, she thoust she sawe neuer a better mas vysage, nor a better farynge knyght. And thenne when the damoysel knewe cer-taynyly that he was not syre launcelot, thenne she took her leue and departed from hym. And thenne syre Trystram rode pryuely vnto the posterne where keppe hym la beale Isoud, and there she made hym good chere and thanked god of his good sped. Soo anone within a whyle the kynge and the quene vnderstood that hit was Tramtryst that smote doune syre Palamydes, thenne was he moche made of more than he was before.

Capitulum XI.

Tavus was sir Tramtryst longe there wel cheryshed, with the kynge and the quene, and namely with la beale Isoud. So vpon a daye, the quene and la beale Isoud made a bayne for syre Tramtryst. And whan he was in his bayne, the quene and Isoud her daughter romed vp & doune in the chamber, and there whyles Gouernail and Hebes attendyd vpon Tramtryst, & the quene beheld his sword there as it laye vpon his bedde. And thene by vnhap the quene drewe out his sword, and beheld it a longe whyle, and bothe they thoughtes it a passynge fayre swerd, but within a foote and an half of the poynte there was a grete pyece there ofoute broken of the edge.
And whan the quene aspyed that gap in the swerd, she remembryd her of a pyece of a swerd, that was foude in the brayne pan of syre Marhaus the good knyght that was her broder. Allas thenne said she vnto her doughter la beale Isoud, this is the same traytoure knyghte that alye my broder thyn eme. Whanne Isoud herd her eaye soo, she was passynge sore abasshed, for passynge wel she loued Tramstryst, and ful wel she knewe the cruelnes of her moder the quene. Anon there with alle the quene went vnto her owne chamber, and soughte her cofre, and there she toke oute the pyece of the swerd that was pulled out of syr Marhaus hede after that he was dede.
And thenne she ranne with that pyece of yron to the swerd that laye vpon the bedde. And whanne she putte that pyece of stele and yron vnto the swerd, hit was as mete as it myghte be, whan it was newe broken. And thene the quene gryped that swerd in her hand fyersly, & with alle her myghte she ranne streyghte vpon Tramstryst where he sat in his bayne. And there she hadde ryued hym thorou hadde not syr Hebes goten her in his armes, and pulled the swerd from her, and els she hadde threst hym thorou. Themne whanne she was lettyd of her euyl wylle, she ranne to the kyng Anguyseh her husband and sayde on her knees, O my lord here haue ye in your hous that traytoure knyght that alye my broder and your seruaunt that noble knyght syr Marhaus. Who is that syd kyng Anguyseh and where is he. Syr she hadde hit is syr Tramstryst the same knyght that my doughter helyd. Allas said the kyng therfore am I ryght heuy, for he is a ful noble knyght as euer I sawe in felde. But I charge you said the kyng to the quene that ye haue not ado with that knyght, but lete me dele with hym. Themne the kyng went in to the chambre vnto syr Tramstryst, and thenne was he gone vnto his chambre, and the kynges fond hym al redy armed to monte vpon his hors. Whanne the kynges sawe hym al redy armed to goo vnto horesbak, the kynges said, nay Tramstryst hit wille not asaile to compare the ageynst me. But thus moche I shalle doo for my worship and for thy loue in soo moche as thou arte within my courte, hit were no worship for me to slee the. Therfore vpon this consdycyon I wille gyue the leue for to departe from this courte in saufe, so thou wilt telle me who was thy fader, and what is thy name, and yf thou slewe syr Marhaus my broder.

Capitulum xii.

Syr said Trystram now I shalle telle you alle the trouthe, my faders name is sir Melyodas kyng of Lyonas, & my moder hyst Elizabeth that was sister vnto kyng Marke of Cornewaile, & my moder dyed of me in the forest. And by cause therof she commaunded or she dyed that when I were crystene, they shold crystene me Trystram, & by cause I wold not be knowen in this countrey I turned my name and lete me calle Tramtryst, & for the trusage of Cornewayle I fought for myn emes sake, & for the ryght of Cornewaile that ye had posseded many yeres. And wete ye well sayd Trystram vnto the kyng I dyd the battaile for the loue of myn vnkel kyng Marke, and for the loue of the countreye of Cornewaile, and for to encresse myn honoure. For that same day that I fought with sir Marhaus I was made knyxt. And never or than dyd I no bataile with no knyght, & fro me he went aluye, & lefte his sheild & is suerd behynde, so god me helpe said the kyng I may not say but ye dyd as a knyght shold, & it was your part to doo for your quarel, & to encresse your worship as a knyght shold, how be it I may not mayntene you in this countrey with my worship onles that I shold displeace my barons & my wyff, & her kyn. Syr said Trystram I thanked you of your good lordship that I haue had with you here, and the grete goodenes my lady your doughter hath shewed me, & therefor said sir Tristram it may so happen that ye shalle wymme more by my lyff than by my dethe, for in the partyes of England it may happen I may doo you servyse at some season that ye shal be glad that euer ye shewed me your good lordship. With more I promise you as I am true knyxt that in all places I shal be my lady your douzters seruasunt, & knyxt in ryght & in wrong, & I shal never sayle her to doo as moche as a knyght maye doo.
Also I byseche your good grace that I may take my leue at my lady your daughter and at alle the Barons and knyghtes. I wil wel said the kyng. Thenne sire Tristram wente vnto la beale Isoud, and tooke his leue of her. And thenne he tolde her all what he was and how he had chaunged his name by cause he wold not be knowen); & hou a lady told hym y' he shold neuer be hole tyl he cam in to this coutrye where the poysyn was made, where thorou I was nere my dethe had not your ladyship ben. O gentyl knyght said la beale Isoud, ful wo am I of thy departynge, for I sawe neuer man that I oughte soo good will to, and there with alle she wepte hertely.
Madame said sire Trystram ye shalle vnderstande that my name is sir Trystram de lyones, goten of kyng Melyodas and borne of his quene. And I promysse you feythfully that I shal be alle the dayes of my lyf your knyghte. Gramercy said La beale Isoud, and I promyse you there ageynste that I shalle not be maryed this seuen yeres but by your assent, and to whome that ye wille I shalle be maryed to, hym wylle I haue, and he wille haue me yf ye wil consente. And thenne syre Trystram gaf her a rynge and she gaf hym another, and ther with he departed fro her, leuyng her, makynge grete dole and lamentacion, and he streynghte wente vnto the Coure amonge alle the Barons, and there he took his leue at moost and leest, and openly he said amonge them all, Faire lorde now it is soo that I muste departe. Yf there be ony man here that I haue offended vnto, or that ony man be with me greued, letcomplayne hym here afore me or that euer I depart and I shal amende it vnto my power.
And yf there be ony that wil profer me wrongs or sye of me wrong, or shame behynde my bak, saye hit now or neuer, and here is my body to make it good body ageynst body. And alle they stood style, ther was not one that wold saye one word, yet were there some knyghtes that were of the quenes blood and of sire Marhaus blood, but they wold not medle with hym.

Capitulum xiii.

Soo sire Tristram departed and toke the see, & with good wynde he arryued vp at Tyntagyl in Cornewaile, & whan kyng Mark was hole in his prosperite ther came tydynges that sir Tristram was arryued and hole of his woundes, therof was kyng marke passyng glad, & soo were alle the barons, & when he sawe his tyme he rode vnto his fader kyng melyodas, & there he had al the chere that the kyng & the queene coude make hym. And thenne largely Kyng Melyodas and his queene departed of their landes and goodes to sire Trystram. Thenne by the lycence of Kyng Melyodas his fader he returned ageye ne vnto the court of kyng Mark, and there he lysed in grete ioye long tymes, vntyl at the laste there befelle a jalousye and an vnkyndenes betwyxe kyng Marke and sir Tristram, for they loued bothe one lady. And she was an erles wyf that hyght syre Segwarydes. And this lady loued syre Trystram passyngly wel. And he loued her ageye for she was a passyng neuy lady, And that aspyed sir Tristram wel. Thenne kyng Mark understanded that and was jalous, for kyng Marke loued her passyngly wel. Soo it felle vpon a day, this lady sent a dwerf vnto sir Tristram and sadde hym as he loued her, that he wold be with her the nyste nexte folowyng. Also she charged you that ye came not to her but if ye be wel armed, for her louer was called a good knyghte. Syre Trystram answerd to the dwerf, recomandde me vnto my lady, and telle her I wille not fayle but I wille be with her the thyme that she hast sette me, and with this answere the dwerf departed. And kyng Marke aspyed that the dwerfe was with syre Trystram vpon message from Segwarydes wyf, thenne kyng Marke sent for the dwerfe. And whanne he was comen, he maade the dwerf by force to telle hym alle why and wherfore that he came on message from sire Tristram.

Now sayd kyng Marko goo where thou wolt, and vpon payne of dethe that thou saye no word that thou spakest with me, soo the dwerf departed from the kyng. And that same nyghte that the steuen was sette betwixt Segwarydes wyfe & syr Trystram kyng Marke armed hym, and made hym redy and took two knyghtes of his counceyle with hym, and soo he rode aforre for to abyde by the waye, for to awayte vpon sir Trystram. And as sire Trystram came rydyngge vpon hys waye with his spere in his hand, kyng Marke came hurtlyngge vpon hym with his two knyghtes sodenly. And alle thre smote hym with theyre speres, and kyng Marke hurt syre 'Trystram on the brest ryght sore. And thenne syre Trystram feutyrd his sper, and smote his vikel kyngke Masse soo sore that he rasshyd hym to the erthe, and brysed hym that he laye styyle in a swoune, and longe hit was or ever he myghte welde hym self. And them he ranne to the one knyght, and ofte to the other, and smote hem to the cold erthe, that they laye styyle. And ther with alle sir Trystram rode farthe sare wounded to the lady, and fonde her abdyngy hym at a postere.

Capitulum xiii.

And there she welcomed hym fayre, and eyther halsed other in armes, and soo she lete putte vp his hors in the best wyse, and them he unarmed hym. And soo they souped lyghtely and wente to bedde with grete ioye and plesunce, and soo in his agyng he took ne kepe of his grene wound that kyngke Marke had gyuen hym. And soo syr Trystram bebled both the ouer shete and the nether & pelowes, and hedhe shete, and within al whylle ther came one afore that warned her that her lord was nere hand within a bowe draughte.
Soo she made sir Trystram to aryse, and soo he armed hym, and tooke his hors and so departed. By thenne was come segwarydes her lord, and whan he fonde her bedde trouble & broken and wente nere and beheld it by candel lyghte, them he sawe that there had layne a wounded knyght. A fals traitresse them he said, why hast thou bitrayed me, and there with alle he swenge oute a swerd and saide, but yf thou telle me who hath ben here, here thou shalt dye. A my lord mercy sayth the lady, and helde vp her handes, sayeng, slee me not, and I shall telle you alle who hath ben here. Telle anone said segwarydes to me alle the trouthe. Anone for drede she saide here was sir Trystram with me, and by the way as he came to me ward, he was sore wounded. A fals traitresse said segwarides where is he become. sir she said he is armes and departed on horsbak not yet hens half a myle. Ye saye wel said segwarydes, them he armed hym lyghtely, and gate his hors and rode after syre Trystram that rode streight wayte vnto Tyntagyl. And within a whylle he ouertoke sire Tristram. And thenne he bado hym torna fals traitour knyghte, and syr Tristram anon torned hym ageynst hym. And there with al segwarides smote syr Trystram with a spere that it alle to braste. And thence he swange oute his swerd, and smote fast at syr Tristram. Syre knyght said syre Trystram I councyle ye that ye smyte no more how be it for the wronges that I haue done you, I wille for-bere you as longe as I maye. Nay sayd Segwarides that shalle not be, for outhre thou shalt dye or I. Thence syre Tristram drewe oute his swerd and hurtled his hors vnto hym fyerly, and thorou the waste of the body he smote syre Segwarides that he felle to the erthe in a sowone. And soo sire Tristram departed and lefte hym there. And soo he rode vnto Tyntagil and tooke his lodgyngs secretely for he wold not be knowen that he was hurte.

Also sir Segwarides men rode after theyr maister, whome they found lyenge in the feld sore wounded, and broust hym home on his shelde, and there he lay longe or that he were hole, but at the laste he recoyuerd. Also kynge Marke wold not be akowne of that sir Tristram and he hadde mette that nyght. And as for syre Trystram he knewe not that kynge Marke had mette with hym. And soo the kynge assauice came to sir Tristram to comforte hym as he laye seke in his bedde. But as longe as kynge Marke lyued, he loued neuer sire Trystram after that, though there was fayre speche, loue was there none. And thus it past many wekes and dayes, & alle was for-gyuen and forgotten. For sire Segwarydes durste not haue ado with sir Tristram by cause of his noble prowesse. And also by cause he was newewe vnto kynge Marke, thercfor he let it ouer alyp, for he that hath a pryuyt hurte is loth to haue a shame outward.

TENNE hit befelle vpon a daye that the good knyghte Bleoberys de ganys broder to Blamore de ganys, & nyghe cosyn vnto the good kynge sir lauolelot du lakens. This Bleoberys came vnto the courte of kynge Marke, & there he asked of kynge Marke a bone to gyue him what yeft that he wold aske in his courte.
Whanne the kyng herd hym aske soo, he merueilde of his askynge, but by cause he was a knyghte of the round table, & of a grete renommé, kynge Marke graunted hym his hole askynge. Thene saide sire Bleoberys I wille haue the fayrest lady in your Courte that me lyst to chese. I maye not say ney sayd kyng marke. Now chese at youre aduenture. And soo sire Bleoberys dyd chese syr segwarydes wyf, and toke her by the hand and soo wente his waye with her, and soo he tooke his hors and gart sette her behynde his quyner and rode vpon his way. When syr segwarydes herd telle that his lady was gone with a knyght of kyng Arthurs courte, Thene he armed hym and rode after that knyght for to rescowe his lady. soo whan Bleoberys was gone with this lady, kyng Mark and all the courte was wroth that she was awey. thenne were there certayne ladyes that knewe that there was grete loue bitwene sir Tristram and her, and also that lady loued sir Tristram aboue alle other knyghtes. Thenne there was one lady that rebuked sir Tristram in the horryblest wyse, and called him coward knyghte, that he wold for shame of his knyghthode see a lady soo shamefully be taken aweye fro his vntels courte. But she ment that eyther of hem hadde loued other with entiere hert.

But sire Tristram answerd her thus. Faire lady it is not my parte to haue adoo in suche maters whyle her lord and husband is present here. And yf hit hadde ben that her lord hadde not ben here in this courte, thenne for the worship of this courte perauntur, I wold haue ben her champyon. And yf so be, sir segwaries speke not wel, it may happen that I wille speke with that good knyght, or euer he passe from this country. Thenne within a whyle came one of sir segwarydes quyner, and told in the court that sir segwaries was beten sore and wounded to the paynte of dethe, as he wold have rescued his lady, sir Bleoberis ouerthrew hym and sore hath wounded hym. Thenne was kyng marke heuy therof, and alle the courte. When sire Tristram herd of this, he was ashamed and sore greued. And thenne was he soone armed and on horsbak, & gouernaile his seruant bare his sheldre and sperre. And soo as sire Tristram rode fast, he mette with sir Andret his oosyn that by the commaundement of kyng Marke was serte to brynge forth & euer it laye it his power, ii. knyghtes of Arthurs Courte that rode by the countrey to seke their adventures. Whan syr Trystram sawe sir Andret, he asked hym what tydynges. Soo god me helpe said syre Andret, ther was neuer worse with me, for here by the commandement of kynges Mark I was sente to fetche two knyghtes of kynges Arthurs courte, and that one bete me, and wounded me, and sette nought by my message. Faire coyn saide sir tristram ryde on your way, and yf I may mete them, it may happen I shall renenge you.

So syr Andret rode in to Cornewaile and syr Tristram rode after the two knyghtes, the whiche one hyght Sagramor le desyres, & the other hyght Dodynas le sauege.

Capitulum xvi.

Thenne within a whyle syr Trystram sawe hem afore hym two lykely knyghtes. Sir saide Gouernaile vnto his maister, sir I wold counseile you nought to haue ado with hem, for they ben two preued knyghtes of Arthurs Courte. As for that saide syr Trystram haue ye no doute, but I wil haue ado with hem to encreace my worship, for it is many dayes sythen I dyd ony dedes of armes. doo as ye lyste saide Gouernaile. And there with alle anone syr Trystram asked them, from whens they came, and whader they wold, and what they dyd in the marches. Syre Sagramore lokid vpon syre Tristram, and hadde scorn of his wordes, & asked hym aseyne, Fair knyght he be ye a knyght of Cornewaile. Where by ake ye hit saide sir Tristram. For it is seldom seene saide sir Sagramore that ye Cornyshe knyghtes ben valyauntes men of armes. For within these two houres there mett vs one of you cornyshe knyghtes, and grete wordes he spak, and anon with lytel myght he was leyd to the erthe. And as I rowe sayd sir Sagramore ye shal haue the same handel that he hadde. Faire lordes saide sir Tristram it may soo happen that I maye better withstande then he dyd, and whether ye wil or nyl, I wil haue ado with you, by cause he was my coyn that ye bete. And therefor here do your best, & wete ye wel but yf ye quyte you the better here vpon this ground, one knyght of cornewaile shal bete you both.
When sire Dodynas le saissege herd hym saye soo he gotte a sperre in his hand and said, sire knyghte (kepe wel) thy self. And thence they departed and came to gyders as it had ben thonder. And syr Dodynas sperre brast in sonder, but syr Troystram smote hym with a more myght, that he smote hym clene ouer the hors croupe that nyghe he hadde broken his neck. Whanne syre Sagramour sawe his felawe haue suche a falle, he merueyld what knyxt he myght be. And he dresseth his sperre with alle his myght, and syr Troystram, ageynst hym, and they came to gyders as the thonder, and ther sir Tristram smote syr Sagramore a stronge buffett that he bare his hors & hym to the erthe, and in the fallyng he brake his thygh. When this was done, syr Troystram asked hem, Fayre knyghte will ye ony more. Be there no bygger knyxtes in the courte of kyng Arthur, it is to you shame to say of vs knyxtes of Cornewayle dishonoure, for it may happen a Cornyshe knyghe may metche you, that is trouthe said syr Sagramore, that haue we wel preued, but I reouyre the sayd syre Sagramore telle vs youre ryght name by the fethye and trouthe that ye owe to the hyghe ordre of knyghthode. ye charch me with a grete thyngse said syr Troystram, and sythen ye lyst to wete hit, ye shal knowe and vnderstande that my name is syr Troystram de Lyonas kyng Melyodas sone, and neuewe vnto kynges Marke. Thenne were they two knygtis fayne, that they had mette with Troystram, and soo they praid hym to abyde in their felauship. Nay said sire Tristram, for I must haue ado with one of your felawes, his name is syr Bleoberys de gawyes. god speke you wel said syr Sagramore and Dodynas. Syre Troystram departed and rode on ward on his waye. And thence was he ware before hym in a valeye where rode syr Bleoberys with sir Segwarydes lady that rode behynde his squyer vpon a palfroy.

Thende syr Troystram rode more than a pass vntyl that he had overtake hym. Thenne spak syr Troystram abyde he said knyght of Arthurs courte, bynge ageynse that lady or deleyuer her to me.
I wille doo neyther said Bleoberys, for I drede no Cornyshe knyght soo sore that me lyste to delyuer her. Why said syr Tristram may not a Cornyshe knyght doo as wel as another knyght. this same daye two knyghtes of your Courte within this thre myle mette with me, And or euer wedeparted, they fonde a Cornyshe knyght good ynoough for them bothe. What were their names said Bleoberis. they told me said syr Tristram that the one of them hyghte syr Sagramore le desyres, and the other hyghte Dodynas le saueseg. A said syr Bleoberys haue ye met with them. Soo god me helpe they were two good knyghtes and men of grete worship. And yf ye haue bete them bothe, ye must nedes be a good knyght, but yf it soo be ye haue bete them bothe, yet shalle ye not fere me, but ye shalle bete me, or euer ye haue thys lady. Thennene defende you said syr Tristram, soo they departed and came to gyder lyke thonder, and eyder bare other doune hors and alle to the erthe. Thennene they suyged their horses, and lasshed to gyder egerly with swerdes and myghtely, now tracyng and trauersynge on the ryght hand and on the lyfte hand more than two houres. And somtymey they rasshed to gyder with suche a myght that they laye bothe gruelynge on the ground. Thennene sir Bleoberis de ganys starte abak, and said thus. Now gentyl good knyght a whyle hold your handes, & ete vs speke to gyders. Saye what ye wille said Tristram, & I wille ansuere you. Sire saide Bleoberys I wold wete of whens ye be, and of whom ye be come, and what is your name. Soo god me help said syr Tristram I fere not to telle you my name. Wete ye wel I am kyng Melyodas sone, and my moder is kyng Markes sister, and my sone is sir Tristram de Lyonas and kyng Marke is myn vnkel. Truly said Bleoberys I am ryght gladd of you, for ye are he that slewe marhaus the knyght hand for hand in an Iland for the trusge of Cornewale. Also ye ouercame sir Palamydes the good knyght at a turnement in an Iland, where ye bete sir Gawayne & his nyne fylawes. Soo god me helpe said sir Tristram wete ye wel that I am the same knyzt. Now I haue told you my name, telle me yours with good will. Wete ye wel that my name is sir Bleoberys de ganys, and my broder hyghte sere Blamore de ganys, that is called a good knyght and we be syster children vnto my lord sir Launcelot du lake that we calle one of the best knyghtes of the world. That is truoth said sir Tristram, sir Launcelot is called pieres of curtesy and of knyghthode, and for his sake said sir Trystram I will not with my good wille fyghte no more with you for the grete loue I haue to sir Launcelot du lake. In good feith said Bleoberys, as for me, I wille be lothe to fyghte with you. But sythen ye folowe me here to haue this lady, I shal profer you kyndens curtesy and gentilnes right here vpon this ground. This lady shalle be betwixe vs bothe, and to whome that she wille go, let hym haue her in pees. I wille wel said Tristræ. For as I deme she wille leue you, and come to me. Ye shalle preue hit anone said Bleoberys.

Capitulum xviii.

Soo whan she was sette betwixe them bothe, she sayd these wordes, vnto sir Tristram. Wete ye wel syr Tristram de lyones that but late thou was the man in the world that I moost loued and trusted. And I wende thou haddest loued me aseyne aboue alle ladies. But whan thou sawest this knyght lede me awayne thou madest no chere to rescowe me, but suffred my lord Segwarydes ryde after me, but vntyl that tyme I wend thou haddest loued me. And thefore now I wille leue the, and noer loue the more, & there with alle she went vnto sir Bleoberys. Whan syr Tristram sawe her doo soo, he was wonderly wrothe with that lady & ashamed to come to the courte. sir Tristram said sir Bleoberys ye are in the defaute, for I here by these ladys wordes, she before this day trusted you aboue alle erethly knyghtes, and as she saith ye haue deceyued her, therfore wete ye wel, ther may noo man bolde that wille aweye, and rather than ye shold be hertely displeasyd with me, I wold ye had her, and she wold ahbye with you. Nay said the lady, so god me help I wil neuer goo with hym. For he that I loued most, I wende he had loued me. And therfore sire Trystram she said ryde as thou cam, for though thou haddest overcome this knyzt as ye was lykely, with the neuer wold I haue gone. And I shall pray this knyghte soo faire of his knyghthode that or euer he passe this countrie, that he wille lede me to the Abbeye, there my lord syr Segwarydes lyeth. Soo god me helpe said Bleoberis I lete yow wete good knyght sire Trystram by cause kynge Marke gaf me the choyse of a yefte in this courte, and so this lady lyked me best. Not withstandynghe she is wedded and hath a lord, and I haue fulfylled my quest, she shall be sent vnto her husband ageyne. And in especyal moost for youre sake sir Trystram. And yf she wold goo with you, I wold ye had her. I thanke you said syr Trystram, but for her loue I shal beware what manere a lady I shalle loue or truste. For had her lord syr Segwarydes ben away from the courte I sholde haue ben the fyrst that sholde haue folowed yow, but sythen ye haue refused me, as I am true knyght I shalle her knowe passyngly wel that I shal loue or trust, and soo they took theyr leue one fro other and departed. And soo sir tristram rode vnto Tyntagyl, and syr Bleoberys rode vnto the abbay where syr Segwarydes lay sore wounded, and there he deluyed his lady, and departed as a noble knyght, & whan sir segwarydes sawe his lady, he was gretely comforted, and thenne she told hym that sir Trystram had done grete batalill with syre Bleoberys, and caused hym to brynge her ageyne. These wordes pleasyd sir Segwarydes right wel that sir tristram wold doo so moche, and soo that lady told alle the batalill vnto kynge Marke betwixte syr Trystram and sir Bleoberys.

Capitulum xix.

Thenne whanne this was done, kynge Mark cast alweyes in his hert how he myght destroye syr Tristram. And thenne he ymagyned in hym self to sende sir tristram in to Irland for la beale Isoud. For sir Tristram had soo preyed her beaute and her goodnes that kynge Mark said he wold wedde her, where uppon he praid syr Tristram to take his wey in to Irland for hym on message. And all this was done to the entente to sike syr Tristram. Not withstandynghe syr Trystram wold not reffuse the message for no daiger nor peryl that myght faile for the pleasyr of his vnkel, but to goo he made hym redy in the most goodlyest wyse that myght be deuyed. For sir Tristram tooke with hym the moyste goodlyest knyghtes that he myght fynde in the courte, & they were arrayed after the gyse that was thense used in the goodlyest maner. So sir Tristram departed and toke the see with alle his felauship. And anone as he was in the bode see, a tempest toke hym and his felauship and drofe them bak in to the coste of England. And there they arrayed fast by Camelot, and ful fayne they were to take the land. And whan they were landed sir Tristram sette yp his paelione vpon the land of Camelot, and there he lete hange his shelde vpon the paelione. And that same day came two knyghtes of kyng Arthurs, that one was syr Ector de marys, and sir Morganor. And they touched the shelde, and badde hym come oute of the paelione for to just and he wold just. ye shalle be anuerd said sir Tristram and ye wille tarye a lytel whyle. Soo he made hym redy, and fyrste he smote doune sir Ector de marys, and after he smote doune sir Morganor alle with one sper, and sore bysed them. And whan they laye vpon the erthe, they asked sir Tristram what he was, and of what countrey he was knyghte. Faire lorde said sir Tristram, wete ye wel that I am of Cornewale. Alas said sire Ector now am I astamed, that euery Cornyshe knyghte shold ouercome me. And themse for desyte syre Ector put of his armour fro hym, and wente on foot and wold not ryde.

Thenne it felle that sire Bleoberys and sire Blamore de ganysa that were bretheren they hadde assommoned the kyng Anguyashe of Irland for to come to Arthurs courte vpon payne of forfeture of kyng Arthurs good grace. And yf the kyng of Irland came not in at the day assigned and sette, the kyng shold lese his landes. So by hit happend that at the day assigned kyng Arthur neither sire Launcelot myght not be there for to gyue the jugement, for kyng Arthurs was with sire launcelot at the castel joyous gard. And so kinge Arthur assigned kyng Carados & the kynghe of Scottes to be there that day as juges. Soo whenne the kynges were at Camelot, kyng Anguyashe of Irlande was come to knowe his accusers. Thenne was there syr Blamor de ganys and appeled the kynge of Irland of treason, that he hadde slayne a cosyn of his in his court in Irland by treason. The kynge was sore abashed of his accusacyon, for why, he was come at the somons of kynge Arthur, and or he came at Camelot he wyst not wherfore he was sente after. And whan the kynge herde syr Blamor saye his wyll he vnderstode wel: there was none other remedy but for to anser hym knyghtely, for the custome was suche in tho dayes, that and ony man were appeled of ony treason or murthier, he shold fyght body for body, or els to fynde an other knyght for hym. And alle maner of murtherers in tho dayes were called treason. And whanne kynge Anguyshe vnderstode his accusynge, he was passynge heuy, for he knew syr Blamor de ganys that he was a noble knyght and of noble knyghtes comen. Thenne the kynge of Irland was symply purveyed of his ansuere, therfore the juges gaf hym respyte by the thyrde daye to gyue his ansuere. Soo the kynge departed vnto his lodgyunge. The meane whyle there came a lady by sir Tristrams paulyone makynge grete dole. What eyleth you sayd sir Tristram that ye make suche dole. A fayre knyght said the lady I am ashamed oniles that somme good knyght helpe me, for a grete lady of worship sente by me a fayre childe and a ryche vnto syr Launcelot du lake, and here by there mette with me a knyght & threwe me doun fro my palfroy and toke awaye the childe from me. Well my lady said syr Tristram and for my lorde syr Launcelots sake I shalle gete you that childe ageyne, or els I shal be beten for hit. And soo sire Tristram toke his hors and asked the lady whiche wey the knyght rode. And theise she tolde hym. And he rode after hym, and within a whyle he ouertoke y'knyght. And thenne syr Tristram badde hym torne and gyue ageyne the child.

The knyght tored his hors and made hym redy for to fyghte. And thenne sir Tristram smote him with a swerde suche a buffete, that he tombled to the erthe. And thenne he yelded hym vnto sir Tristram. Come then thy way said syr Tristram and brynge the childe to the lady aayne. Soo he toke his hors mekely and rode with syr Tristram, and thenne by the waye sir Tristram asked him his name, and he said my name is Breus saunce pyte. Soo whanne he had delyuered that childe to the lady he said, sir as in this the childe is well remedied. And thenne sir Trystram lete hym goo aayne that sore repent hym after, for he was a grete foo vnto many good knyghtes of kyng Arthurs courte. Thenne whan syr Tristram was in his pauelyone, Gouernaile his man came and told him how that kyng Anguyshe of Irland was com thyder and he was put in grete dystresse, and there Gouernaile told sir Tristram how kyng Anguyshe was somoned and appeled of murther. Soo god me helpe said sir Tristram these ben the best tydyngest that euer cam to me this seuen yeres, for now shall the kyng of Irland haue neede of my helpe, for I dar saye there is no knyght in this coultre that is not of Arthurs courte dare doo bataill with syr Blamor de ganyes, and for to wynne the loue of the kyng of Irland I wil take the bataill vpon me, and therefore Gouernaile brynge me I charge the to the kyng. Soo Gouernaile wente vnto kyng Anguyshe of Irland and salwe him fayre. The kyng welcomed hym and asked hym what he wold. Syr saide Gouernaile here is a knyghte nere honde that desyreth to speke with you, he badde me say he wold do you seruyce. What Knyght is he sayd the kyng. Syr sayd he hit is syr Tristram du lyonas that for your good grace that ye shewed to hym in your landes wyll rewarde you in this coultre. Come on felawe said the kyng with me alone and shewe me vnto sir Trystram. Soo the kyng toke a lytell hackeney and but fewe felauiship with him vntyl he came vnto syr Trystrams pauelione. and whanne syre Trystram sawe the kyng, he ramne vnto hym and wold haue holden his styrop. But the kyng lepte from his hors lyghtly, & eyther halsed other in their armes. My gracius Lord sayde syr Trystram, gramercy of your grete goodnesse shewed vnto me in your marches and londe. And at that tyme I promysed you to doo you seruyce and euer hit laye in my power. And gentylly knyght sayd the kyng vnto sir Tristram, now haue I grete neede of you, neuer hadde I soo grete neede of no knyghtes helpe. How so my good lorde said sir Trystram. I shalle telle you sayd the kynge. I am assomoned and appeled fro my coutree for the deth of a knyxt that was kynne vnto the good knyght syr Launcelot, wherfore syr Blamor de ganys broder to syr Bleoberys hath appeled me to fyght with hym, or euyher to fynde a knyght in my stede. And I wote well sayd the kynge these that are come of kynge Bans blood, as syr Launcelot and these other are paasynge good knyghtes and harde men for to wynne in batayll as ony that I knowe now lyuynge. Sir said syr Tristram, for the good lordshiph that ye shewed vnto me in Irland and for my lady your doutheres sake la beale Isoud I wille take the bataille for you vpon this condycyon, that ye shall graunte me two thynge, that one is that ye shall swere to me that ye are in the ryght, that ye were neuer consentynge to the knyghtes deth. Syr theiie said sir Trystram, whanne that I haue done this bataille ye god gyue me grace that I spede that ye shalle gyue me a rewarde what thynge resonable that I wil sake of you.
Soo god me helpe sayd the kynge ye shal haue what someuer ye wyll sake. It is well said sayd sir Tristram.

Capitulum xxii.

Now make your answere that your champyon is redy. For I shall deye in your quarell rather than to be recreaunt. I haue no doubte of you sayd the kynge, that and ye shold haue adoo with syr Launcelot du lake. Syre said syr Tristram, as for syr Laucelot he is called the noblest knyxt of the worlde. And wete ye well that the knyghtes of his blood are noble men and drede shame, and as for Bleoberys broder vnto syr Blamor I haue done batayll with hym, therfore vpon my heed hit is noo shame to calle hym a good knyght.
It is noysd sayd the kynge that syr Blamor is the hardyer knyght.
Syr as for that lete hym he, be shall neuer be refused, and as he were the best knyght that now bereth sheldre or spere. Soo kynge An-guysehe departed vnto kynge Carados and the kynges that were that tyme as juges and tolde hem that he hadde fonde his champyon redy.
And thenne by the commanndement of the kynges syr Blamor de ganys and sir Trystram de lyones were sente for to here their charge. And whanne they were comen to fore the juges, there were many kynge and knyghtes that behelde syr Trystram, and moche speche hadde they of hym by cause that he slewe syr Marhaus the good knyght, and also by cause he foriust syr Palomydes that noble knyght. Soo whanne they had taken their charge, thenne they withdrew them for to make hem redy to doo batayll. Thenns said syr Bleoberys vnto his broder syr Blamor, sayr dere broder now remembre of what kynne that we are comen of, and what a man that syr Lancelot du lake is, neyther fether nor nerer but broders chil- dern, and there was neuer none of our kynne that euer was ashamed in batayll, and rather suffre deth broder than to be shamed. Broder sayd Blamor haue ye noo doubte of me, for I shall neuer shame none of my blood, how be it I am sure that yonder knyzt is called a pass- ynge good knyght as of his tyme one of the best of the worlde, yet shall I neuer yelde me nor saye the lothe worde, well may he happen to smyte me doun with his grete myght of chualrye, but rather shall he see me than I shal yelde me as recreaït. God spede you well sayd syr Bleoberys, for ye shall fynde him the myghtyest knyght that euer ye hadde adoo withall, for I knowe hym for I haue hadde adoo with hym. God me spede sayd syr Blamor de ganys, and there with he took his hors at the one ende of the lystes, and so they feutryd theyr speres and came to gyders as hit had ben thonder, and there syr Trystram through grete myghte smote doun syr Blamore & his hors to the erthe. And anone syr Blamor auoyded his hors & pulled out his swerde & threwe his sheld afore hym and badde syr Trystram algyght, for though an hors hath fayed me I truste to god the erthe wyl not fayle me. And then syr Trystram algyght and dressyd hym vnto batayll & there they lashed to gyder stronglye as racynge & tracyng, foyngyng and dasshynge 'many sad strokes that the kynges & knyghtes had grete wonder that they myght stande, for euer they fought lyke wood men so that there were neuer knyghtes sente fyghte more fyersly than they dyd, for sire Blamore was so hasty that he wold haue no reten that alle men wondred that they had brethe to stande on their feet, and alle the place was blody that they fought in. And at the laste syre Trystram smote syr Blamor suche a buffet upon the helme that he there felle doun upon his syde, and sir Trystram stode and beheld hym.

Thenn whan sir Blamor myghte speke, he said thus. Syre Tristram de Lyones I requyre the as thou art a noble knyghte and the best knyghte that euer I fonde that thou wilt alee me oute, for I wold not lyue to be made lord of alle the erth, for I haue leuer dye with worship than lyue with shame, and nedes sir Tristram thou must alee me, or elshou shalt neuer wynne the feld, for I wille neuer saye the lothe word. And therfore yf thou dare alee me, alee me, I requyre the. Whanne sir Tristram herd hym saye soo knyghtely, he wyste not what to doo with hym, he remembringe hym of bothe partyes of what blood he was comen, and for sir Launcelots sake he wold be lothe to alee hym, and in the other party in no wyse he myghte not cheue, but that he must make hym to saye the lothe word or elsh to alee hym. Thenne syre Tristram starte abak and went to the kynge that were juge, and ther he kneled down to fore hem and besoughte hem for their worshippes and for kynge Arthurs and sir Launcelots sake that they wold take this mater in theyr handes. For my fayre lorde saide sir tristram hit were shame and pyte, that this noble knyght that yonder lyeth shold be slayne, for ye here wel, shamed wille he not be, and I pray to god that he neuer be slayne nor shamed for me. And as for the kyng for whom I fyghte fore I shalle requyre hym as I am his true champion and true knyghte in this feld that he wille haue mercy upon this good knyghte. So god me helpe saide kynge Anguyshe I wil for youre sake syre tristram be ruled as ye wyll haue me. For I knowe you for my true knyghte. And therefore I wyll hertely pray the kynge that ben here as juge to take hit in theire handes. And the kynge that were juge called syr Bleoberys to them, and askyd hym his aduyse. My lorde saide Bleoberys, though my broder be beten and hath the wers thorou myghte of armes I dare saye though syre Trystram hath beten his body, he hath not beten his herte, and I thanke god he is not shamed.
this daye. And rather than he shold be shamed, I requyre you sayd Bleoberys lete sir Tristram slee hym oute. It shalle not be soo sayd the kynges, for his parte adversary bothe the kyng and the champyon haue pyte of syre Blamors knyghthode. My lorde said Bleoberys I wille ryght wel as ye wille.

Thenne the kynges called the kyng of Irland and fond hym goodely and tretably. And thenne by alle their aduyses syre Tristram and syre Bleoberys toke vp sire Blamore, and the two bretheren were accorded with kyng Anguyshe, and kyssed and made frendys for euer. And thenne sire Blamor and sire Trystram kyssed to gyders, and there they made their othes that they wold neuer none of them two bretheren fyghte with syre Trystram, and syre Trystram made the same oth. And for that gentyl bataille alle the blood of syre Launcelot loued sire Trystram for euer.

Thenne kyng Anguyshe and syre Tristram toke there leue and sailed in to Irland with grete noblesse and ioye. Soo whanne they were in Irland, the kyng lete make it knowen thoroute alle the land how and in what manere syre Trystram had done for hym. Thenne the Quene and alle that there were made the moost of hym that they myghte. But the joye that la beale Isoud made of syr Tristram there myghte no tonge telle, for of alle men erthely she loued hym moost.

Thenne upon a daye kyng Anguyshe asked syr Tristram why he asked not his bone. For what someuer he had promyse hym, he shold haue hit withoute fayle. Syr sayd sire Trystram now is hit tyme this is alle that I wylle desire that ye wylle gyue me la beale Isoud youre daughter not for my self but for myn vnel kyng Marka that shalle haue her to wyf, for soo haue I promyse hym. Alas said the kyng I had leuer than alle the land that I haue, ye wold wedde her youre self. Syre and I dyd than I were shamed for euer in this world, and fals of my promyse. Therfore said sire Trystram I praye you hold your promyse that ye promyseqed me, for this is my desyre that ye wytte gyue me la Beale Isoud to goo with me in to Cornesail for to be wedde to kynge Marke myn vnkel. As for that sayd kynge Anguyshe ye shalle haue her with you to dawe with her what it please you, that is for to saie ye that ye lyst to wedde her your self that is me leuest, And ye ye will gyue her vnto kynge Marke youre vnkel that is in youre choyse.

Soo to make short conclusion la beale Isoud was made redy to goo with syre Trystram and dame Bragwayne wente with her for her chyf gentylwman with many other, thenne the quene Isouds moder gaf to her and dame Bragwayne her douther gentilwoman and vnto Gouernaille a drynke and charged them that what day kynge Marke shold wedde that same daye they shold gywe hym that drynke, soo that kynge Marke shold drynke to la beale Isoud, and thenne said the Quene I vndertake eyther shalle loute other the dayes of their lyf. Soo this drynke was yeven unto dame Bragwayne and unto Gouernaille. And thenne anone syre Tristram tooke the see, and la Beale Isoud, and whan they were in theire caban, hit happed soo that they were thursty, and they sawe a lytel flacked of golde stande by them, and hit semed by the colour and the taste that it was noble wyn. Thenne sire Trystram toke the flacket in his hand, and sayd Madame Isoud here is the best drynke that euer ye drank that dame Bragwayne youre mayden and Gouernayle my seruaunt have kepte for them self. Thenne they lough and made good chere and eyther dranke to other frely, and they thoughte never drynke that euer they dranke to other was soo swete nor soo good. But by that thyer drynke was in their bodyes, they loued eyther other so wel that neuer thyer loute departede for wele neyther for wo. And thus it happe the loute fyeste betwexe sire Tristram and la beale Isoud, the whiche loute neuer departede the dayes of their lyf, soo thenne they sayled tyl by fortune they came nyghe a castel that hyght Pluer. And there by arryued for to repose them wenying to them to haue hadde good beborous, but anon as sir Tristram was with in the castel, they were taken prysoners, for the custome of the castel was suche who that rode by that castel and brought any lady he must nedes fylghte with the lord that hyghte Breuorn. And ye it were soo that Breuorn wanne the feld, thenne shold the knyght straunger and his lady be patte to dethe what that euer they were, and yf hit were so that the strauge knyghte wanne the feld of sir Breunor, thenne shold he dye and his lady bothe, this custome was vsed many wnynters, for hit was called the castel pluere that is to saye the wepyng castel.

Capitulum xxvi.

Thus as sire Trystram and la beale Isoud were in pryson, hit happed a knyght and a lady came vnto them, where they were to chere them. I haue merueille said Tristram vnto the knyzt and the lady what is the cause the lord of this Castel holdeth vs in pryson, hit was neuer the custome of no place of worship that euer I came in, whan a knyghte and a lady asked herborugh, and they to receyue hem, & after to destroye them that ben his gestes. Syr said the knygt this is the old custome of this castel that whan a knyghte cometh here, he must nedes fyghte with our lord, and he that is the weyker muste lese his heede. And whan that is done yf his lady that he bryngeth, be fouler than our lorde wyf, she must lese her heede.
And yf she be fayrer preued than is oure lady, thenne shal the lady of this castel lese her heede. Soo god me help said sire Tristram this is a fowle custome and a shamefull. But one ausaitage haue I said sir Trystram I haue a lady is fayre ynour fayrer sawe I neuer in alle my lye dayes. And I doubt ne for lack of beaute she shalle not lese her heede, and rather than I shold lese my heede I wille fyghte for hit on a fayre feldhe. Wherfore Syre knyght I pray you telle your lord that I wille be redy as to morne with my lady and my selue to doo bastail yf hit be so I maye haue my hors and myne armour. Syr said that knyghte I vndertake that your desyre shalle be spedde ryght wel.

And thenne he sayd take youre rest and loke that ye be vp by tymes and make you redy and your lady, for ye shall wants no thynge that you behoueth, and ther with he departed and cur the morne by tymes that same knyghte came to sire Trystram and fetched hym oute and his lady & brouzte hym hors and armour that was his owne, and badde hym make hym redy to the feld, for alle the estates and comyns of that lordship were there redy to behold that bataille and jugement.

Thenne came syre Breunor the lord of that Castle wyth his lady in his hand mufeld, and asked syre Trystram where was his lady, for and thy lady be fayrer than myn wyth thy swerd smyte of myladies hede, and yf my lady be fayrer than thyne, with my swerd I muste stryke of her heed. And yf I maye wynn the, yet shalle thy lady be myne, and thou shalt lese thy hede. Syre said Tristram this is a fowle custome and horryble; and rather than my lady shold lese her heed, yet had I leuer lese my hede. Nay nay said sire Breunor the ladies shalle be fyrst shewed to gyder, and the one shalle haue her jugement. Nay I wille not soo said sire Tristram, For here is none that wille gyue ryghteous jugement. But I doubte not said sir Tristram my lady is fayrer than thyne. And that wille I preue and make good with my hand. And who someuer he be that wille saye the contrarie I will preue hit on his hede. And there with sire Tristram shewed la beale Isoud, and tored her thryes aboute with his naked swerd in his hand. And whanne syre Breunor sawe that he dyd the same wyse torne his lady. But whanne syre Breunor beheld la beale Isoud, hym thought he sawe neuer a fayrer lady, and thenne he dradde his ladies hede shold be of, and soo all the peple that were there present gaf jugement that la beale Isoud was the fayrer lady and the better made. how now said sir Tristram me semeth it were pyte that my lady shold lose her heed, but by cause thou and she of long tyme haue vsed this wycked custome, and by you bothe haue many good knyghtes and ladies ben destroyed, for that cause it were no loose to destroye you bothe. Soo god me help said sir Breunor for to saye the sothe, thy lady is fayrer than myn, and that me sore repeteth. And soo I here the peple pryuely saye, for of alle wymmen I sawe none soo fayre, and therfor and thou wilt slee my lady I doute not but I shal slee thee and haue thy lady. Thou shalt wynne her said sir Tristram as dere as euer knyzt wan lady. And by cause of thyn owne jugement as thou woldest haue done to my lady yf that she had ben fouler, and by cause of the euyl custome gyue me thy lady said Trystram, & ther with alle sir Tristram strode vnto hym and toke his lady from hym, and with an auke stroke he smote of her hede clene, wel knyght said sir Breunor now hast thou done me a despyte.

Capitulum xxvi.

Now take thyn hors sythen I am lady les I wil wyn thy lady and I may, themne they took their horses, & came to gyders as hit had ben the thonder, and sire Trystram smote sir Breunor clene from his hors, and lyzteley he rose vp. And as sir Trystram came ageyne by hym, he threst his hors thorou oute both the sholders that his hors hurled here and there, and felle dede to the ground. And euere sir Breunor ranne after to have slayne sire Tristram, but sire Tristram was lyght and nymel and voyded his hors lightely. And or euere sir Trystram myght dresse his sheld and his sword, the other gaf hym thre or foure sadde strokes. Thenne they rasshed to gyders like two bores tracyng and trauercynge myztestely and wysely as two noble knyghtes. For this sire Breunor was a proued knyghte and hadde ben or than the dethe of many good knyghtes, that it was pyte that he had so long endured. Thus they fouzt hurlynghe here & there nyz two houres and eyder were wounded sore, themne at the last sir Breunor rashed vpon sir Trystram and tooke hym in his armes, for he trusted moche in his strengthe. Thenne was sir Trystram called the strengest and the hyest knyghte of the world, For he was called bygger than sir laicelot, but syr Launcelot was better brethed. Soo anone sire Trystram thrust syr Breunor doune grouelynghe, and themne he unlaced his helme, and strake of his hede. And thenne al they that longed to the castel cam to hym and dyd hym homage and feaute prayenge hym, that he wold abyde there stylle a litel whyle to fordo that foule custom. Syr Trystram graunted ther to, the meane whyle one of the knyghtes of the castel rode vnto sire Galahad the haut prynce, the whiche was sir Breunors sone, whiche was a noble knyzt and told hym what mysauentre his fader hadde and his moder.
Capitulum xxvii.

Thenne came sir Galahad and the kyng with the honerd knyghtes with hym, and this syr Galahad profered to fyghte with sir Trystram hand for hand, and soo they made them redy to go vnto bataile on horsbak with grete courage. Thenne sir Galahad and sir Trystram mette to gyders soo hard that eyder bare other doune hors and alle to the erthe. And thene they swoyded their horses as noble knyghtes and dressid there sheldes and drewe their swerdes with jue & rancour, and they lashed to gyder many sackle strokes, and one whyle strykynge another whyle foynygge, treyngge and traersynge as noble knyghtes, thus they fought long nerhe half a day and eyder were sore wounded. At the last sire Trystram waxed lyght and bygge, and doubled his strokes and drofe syr Galahad abak on the one syde and on the other, so that he was lyke to haue ben slayne. With that came the kyngge with the honerd knyghtes and all that felauiship went fyerely vpon sir Trystram. When sir Trystram sawe them comyng vpon hym, them he wist wel he myghte not endure. Thenne as a wyse knyght of werre he saide to syr Galahaud the hauft prynce, syre ye shewe to me no knyghtshode for to suffre alle youre men to haue adoo with me at ones. And as me semeth ye be a noble knyghte of your handes, hit is grete shame to you. So god me helpe said sire Galahad there is none other waye but thou must yele the to me, outher els to dye said sire Galahad to sir Trystram, I wille rather yele me to you than dye, for that is more for the myght of your men than of your handes. And ther with alle sire Trystram tooke his owne suerd by the poynte, and put the pomel in the hand of sir Galahad. ther with alle came the kyngge with the honerd knyghtes, and hard beganne to assyalle sir Trystram, lete he said sire Galahad be ye not soo hardy to touche hym, for I hauyn gyuen this knyght his lyf, that is youre shame said the kyngge with the C knyghtes, hath he not slayne your fader and your moder. As for that said syr Galahad I may not wyte him gretely for my fader had hym in pryson, and enforced hym to doo bataill with hym, and my fader haued suche a customme that was a shameful custome that what knyght came there to aske herborouh his lady must nedes deye but yf she were fayrer than my moder. And yf my fader ouercame that knyght he must nedes deye. This was a shameful customme and vsage, a knyghte for his herberowe askyenge to haue such herborage. And for this customme I wold never drawe aboute hym. So god me helpe said the kynge this was a shameful cus-tomme. Truly said syre Galahad soo semed me, and me semed it had ben grete pyte that this knyght shold haue ben alayne, for I dare saye he is the noblest man that bereth lyf, but yf it were syr launcelot du lake. Now fayre knyght said sir Galahad I requyre the telle me thy name, and of whens thou arte, and whyder thou wolte. Syr he said my name is sir Trystram du lyones & from kynge Marke of Cornewaile I was sente on message vnto kynge Anguyshe of Irland for to fetche his daughter to be his wyf, & here she is reddy to go with me in to Cornewaile, and her name is la beale Isoud, and, sir Trystram said sir Galahad the haut prynce, wel be ye fonde in these marches, & soo ye wille promyse me to goo vnto syr Launcelot du lake, and accompanye with hym, ye shalle goo where ye wylle, and your fayre lady with you. And I shalle promyse you neuer in al my dayes shal suche custommes be vse in this castel as haue ben vse.
Syr said syre Trystram now I lete you wete soo god me helpe I wende ye had ben syr Launcelot du lake, whan I sawe you fyrste, and therfore I dredde you the more. And sire I promyse you said sir Tristram as soone as I may, I wille see sir launcelot, and enfelushippe me with hym, for of alle the knyghtes of the world I moost desyre his felauship.

Capitulum xxviii.

And thene sir Tristram took his leue whan he sawe his tyme and tooke the see. And in the meane whyle word came vnto sir Launcelot and to sir Trystram that sire Carados the myghty kyunge that was made lyke a gyaunt, that fought with syr Gawyn and gaf hym suche strokes that he swounded in his sadel, and after that he took hym by the collere, and pulled hym oute of his sadel, and fast bounde hym to the sadel bowe, and so rode his wey with hym toward his castell. And as he rode by fortune sir Launcelot mette with sire Carados and anone he knewe sire Gawayne, that lay bounde after hym. A said sir Launcelot vnto sire Gawayne how stonde it with you. Neuer so hard said sir Gawayn onles that ye helpe me, for so god me help without ye rescowe me I knowe no knyght that may but uther you or syr Trystram. Wherfor sir Launcelot was heuy of sir Gawayns wordes. And thenne sir Launcelot bad sir Carados leye doune that knyghte, & fyghte with me. thou arte but a foole saide sire Carados, for I wylle serue you in the same wyse, as for that said sir Launcelot spare me not, for I warne the I wil not spare the. And thenne he bond sir Gawayne hand and foot, and so threwe hym to the ground. And thenne he gate his sper of his squyer, and departed from syr launcelot to fetche his cours, and soo eyther met with other, and brake their speres to their handes, & thenne they pulled out swerdes, and hurtle to gyders on horsebak more than an houre. And at the laste sire launcelot smote sire Carados suche a buffet upon the helme that it perched his brayne pan. So thenne sir Launcelot toke sire Carados by the coller and pulled hym vnder his hors feets. And thenne he alyste and pulled of his helme, and strake of his hede. And thenne syr Launcelot vnbounde sire Gawayne. Soo this same tale was told to sir Galahad and to syr Trystram, here maye ye here the noblenes that foloweth sire launcelot. Allas said syr Trystram and I had not this message in hand with this fayre lady, truly I wold neuer stynte or I had fonde syre Launcelot. Thenne sire Trystram and la beale Isoud wente to the see & came in to Cornewaile, and there alle the barons mette hem.

Capitulum xix (xxix.)

And anone they were rychely wedded with grete nobley. But euere as the freynshe book sayth syr Trystram and la beale Isoud loued euere to gyders.

Thenne was there grete justes and grete torneyenge, and many lovedes and ladyes were at that feest, and sir Trystram was most prayred of alle other, thus dured the feest longe, and after the feest was done, within a lytel whyle after by the assent of two ladyes that were with quene Isoud, they ordeyned for hate and enuy for to destroye dame Bragwayne, that was mayden and lady vnto la beale Isoud, and she was sente in to the forest for to fethche herbes, and there she was mette & bounde feete and hand to a tree, and soo she was bounden three dayes. And by fortune sir Palamydes fond dame Bragwayne, and there he deluyerd her from the dethe, and brought her to a nonmery there besyde for to be recouerd. Whanne Isoud the quene myst her mayden, wete ye wel she was ryght heuy as euer was any quene, for of alle ethely wyrmens she loued her best, the cause was for she came with her oute of her countreye.

And soo vpon a day quene Isoud walked in to the forest to putte awaye her thoughtes, and ther she wente her self vnto a welle, and made grate mona, and sodenly there came Palamydes to her, and had herd alle her complaynte, and sayd Madame Isoud and ye wille graunte me my bone, I shalle brynge to you dame Bragwayne saf and sound. And the quene was so glad of his profer, that sodenly vaunysed she graunert alle his askynge. Wel madame said Palamydes I trust to your promyse. And yf ye wille abyde here half an houre, I shal brynge her to you. I shal abyde you said la beale Isoud. And sir Palamydes rode forth his way to that nonmery, and lyghtly he came ageynse with dame Bragwayne, but by her good wille she wold not haue comen ageynse, by cause for loue of the quene she stood in aueture of her lyf. Notwithstanding full ageynst her wille she wente with sir Palamydes vnto the quene. And when the quene sawe her, she was passyng glad. Now madame said Palamydes remembere upon your promyse for I have fullfilled my promyse. Sir Palamydes said the quene I wote not what is your desyre. But I wille that ye wete how be it I promysed you largely I thought none euyl nor I warne you none ylle wille I doo. Madame said sir palamydes, as at this tyrne ye shalle not knowe my desyre, but before my lord your husband there shalle ye knowe that I wil haue my desyre that ye haue promysed me. And therwith the quene departed and rode home to the kyngge, and sir palamydes rode after her. And when syr Palamydes came before the kyng, he said sir kyng I requyre you as ye be a ryghteous kyng that ye wille juge me the ryght. Telle me your cause said the kyng and ye shalle haue ryght.

Capitulum xxx.

Syrk said Palamydes I promysed your Quene Isoud to brynge aseyne dame Bragwayne that she had lset vpon this couenaunt that she shold graunte me a bone that I wold aske, and without grutchyne outhur auysemët she graunted me. What saye ye my lady said the kyng, hit is as he saith soo god me help said the quene, to saye the soth, I promysd hym his askyng for loue and ioye that I had to see her. Wel madame said the kyng, and yf ye were hasty to graunte hym what bone he wold aske, I wyll wel that ye performe your promysye. Thenne said Palamydes I will that ye wete that I wille haue your quene to lede her and gouerne her where as me lyst. There with the kyng stood styl, and be thought hym of sir Trystram, and demed that he wold rescowe her. And thenne hastely the kyng ansuerd take her with the advetures that shal falle of hit, for as I suppose thou wylt not enioye her noo whyle As for that said Palamydes I dare ryght wel abyde the adventure, and soo to make short tale, sir Palamydes toke her by the hand, and said Madam grutch not to goo with me, for I desire no thynge but your own promysye. As for that said the quene I fere not gretely to go with the, hou be it thoun hyst me at asuaxantage vpon my promysye. For I doute not I shalle be worshipfully rescowed fro the. As for that said sir Palamydes be it as it be maye. So quene Isoude was sette behynde Palamydes, and rode his way. anon the kyng seyte after syr Trystram, but in no wyse he coude be foûde, for he was in the forest an huntyng, for that was alwyes his custome, but yf he vseyd armes, to chasse and to hunte in the forestes. Allas said the kyng now I am shamed for euer that by myn owne assente my lady and my quene shalle be deouered. Themne came forthe a knyght his name was lambegus, and he was a knyght of syr Trystram. My lord sayd this knyght sythe ye haue truste in my lord sire Tristram, wete ye wel for his sake I wille ryde after your queene and rescowe her, or els I shal be beten. Gramercy saide the kynge, & I lyue sir Lambegus I shal deserue hit. And themne sir Lambegus armed hym, and rode after as fast as he myghte. And themne within a whyle he ouertoke sir Palamydes. And themne sir Palamydes lefte the queene. whate thou saide Palamydes, arte thou Trystram, nay he saide I am his seruaunte, and my name is sir Lambegus, that me repenteth saide Palamydes. I hadde leuer thou haddest ben sire Trystram, I bileue you wel said Lambegus, but when thou metest with sir Trystram thou shalt haue thy handes ful. And themne they hurtled to gyders and alle to braste their speres, and themne they pulled oute their swerdes, and hewed on helmes and hauberkes. At the laste sire Palamydes gaf sir Lambegus suche a wound that he felle doun lyke a dede knyghte to the erthe. Themne he loked after la beale Isoud, and thene she was gone he nyst where. wete ye, wel sir Palamydes was neuer soo heuy. So the queene rann in to the forest, and there she fond a wel, and theryn she hadde thoughte to haue drowned her self. And as good fortune wold ther camne a knyght to her that hadde a Castel ther by his name was sirg Adtherp. And when he fonde the queene in that meschyeff, he rescowed her, and broughte her to his castel. And whanne he wyst what she was he armed hym, and took his hors and said, he wold be auengyd vpon palamydes and soo he rode on tyll he mette with hym, and there sir Palamydes wounded hym sore, and by force he made hym to telle hym the cause why he dyd bataille with hym, and how he had ladd the queene vnto his castel. Now brynge me there said palamydes or thou shalt dye of my handes. Sir said sir Adtherp I am soo wounded I may not folowe, but ryde you this way and hit shalle brynge you in to my castel, and there within is the queene. Themne sire Palamydes rode styll tyll he came to the Castel. And at a wyndowe La Beale Isoud sawe sir Palamydes, themne she made the yates to be shette strongly. And whan he sawe he myght not come within the castel, he putte of his brydel and his sadel, and putte his hors to pasture, and sette hym selfe doune atte (the) gate lyke a man that was oute of his wytte that retchyd not of hym self.

Now torne we vnto sir Tristram that whanne he was come home, and wyse in Beale Isoud was gone with syr Palamydes wete ye wel he was wrothe oute of mesure. Allas said sir Tristram I am this day shamed. Thenne he cryed to Gouernaille his man, haste the that I were armed and on hordes, for wel I wote Lambegus hath no myghte nor strengthe to withstande sir Palamydes. Allas that I haue not ben in his stede. Soo anone as he was armed and horsed sir Tristram and Gouernaille rode after in to the forest, and within a whyle he fond his knyght Lambegus al moost woode to the thethe, and syre Tristram bare hym to a fostre, and charged hym to kepe hym wel. And thenne he rode forth and there he fond syr Adtherp sore wounded, and he told hym how the quene wold haue drowned her self had not he ben. And bow for her sake & loue he had taken vpon hym to doo bataille with sir Palamydes. Where is my lady said sire Tristram. Syr said the knyght she is sure ynoogh within my Castel, & she can hold her within hit. Gramercy said syre Tristram of thy grete goodenes, and soo he rode thyg he came nyghe to that Castel, and thanne syr Tristram sawe where syr Palamydes sat at the gate slepynge, and his hores pastured fast afore hym. Now goo thou Gouernaille said sire Tristram, and byd hym awake, and make hym redy. So Gouernayle rode vnto hym, and said sire Palamydes aryse and take to the thyn harnes, but he was in suche a study he herd not what Gouernayle said. So Gouernaille came aegyne and told syre Trystram he slepte or els he was madde. Goo thou aegyne said sire Tristram and bydde hym aryse, and telle hym that I am here his mortal foo. So Gouernaille rode aegyne and putte vpon hym the but of his sperne, and said sire Palamydes make the redy, for wete ye wel syr Tristram houeth yonder and sendeth the word he is thy mortal foo. And there with all sire Palamydes arose styly withoute wordes and gate his hors, and aadeled hym, and byrdeled hym, and lyghtely he lepte vpon, and got his sperne in his hand, and eyde feutryd their spernes and hurtled faste to gyders, and there Tristram smote doune sire Palamydes ouer his hors tayle. Thenne lightely sire Palamydes putte his sheld afore hym and drewe his sword. And there beganne stronge battayl on bothe partyes, for both they fought for the loute of one lady, and euere she laye on the wallis and behelde them, how they foughte oute of mesure, and eyther were wooned passyng sore, but Palamydes was moche soror wooned. Thus they foughte trauynge and trauercyng more than two houres that wel nygh for dole and sorowe la beale Isoud swouned. Alas she said that one I loued and yet doo, and the other I loue not, yet it were grete pyte that I shold see sir palamydes slayne, for wel I knowe by that tym the ende be done, sir Palamydes is but a dede knyst, by cause he is not crystened I wold be lothe that he shold dye a sarasyn. And there with alle she came doune and biciought sire Trystram to fyghte no more. A madame saide he what meane you, wille ye haue me shamed, wel ye knowe I wille be ruled by you. I wille not your dishonour saide la beale Isoud but I wold that ye wold for my sake spare this vnhappy sarasyn Palamydes. Madam said syre Trystram I wille leue fyghtyng eat this tym for your sake.

Thenne she said to sire Palamydes this shalle be your charge that thou shalt goo oute of this countray whyle I am therin. I wille obeye your commandement said sire Palamydes, the whiche is sore ageynst my wyle. Thenne take thy waye said la beale Isoud vnto the Courte of kyng Arthur, and there recommaide me vnto quene Gueneuer, and telle her that I send her word, that ther be withyn this land but four louers, that is sire Launcelot du lake and quene Gueneuer and sire Trystram d'eylonas and quene Isoud.

Capitulum xxxii.

And soo syre Palamydes departed with grete heuynes. And sere Tristram took the quene and brouzte her ageyne to kyng Marke, and thenne was there made grete joye of her home comynge. Who was cheryshed but sir Tristram. Thenne sir Trystram lete fetche syr Lambegus his knyste fro the fosters hoes and hit was longe or he was hole, but at the last he was wel recouerd, thus they lyued with joye and play a long whyle. But ever sir Andred that was nygh cosyn to sir Trystram lay in a watche to wayte betwix sir Trystram and la beale Isoud for to take hem and sklaundre hem. Soo vpon a day sir Trystram talked with la beale Isoud in a wyndowe, and that aspyed sir Andred and told it to the kynde. Thenne kynde Marke took a sword in his hand and came to sir Trystram and called hym fals traitour, and wold haue styken hym. But sir Trystram was nyghe hym and ranne vnder his sword and tooke hit oute of his hande.
And thenne the kynde cryed where are my knyghtes and my men, I charge you alee this traitour. But at that tyme there was not one wold meue for his wordes. Whanne syre Trystram sawe that there was not one wold be ageynst hym, he shoke the swerde to the kyne and made countenance as though he wold haue styken hym. And thenne kynde Marke fledde, and sire trystram folowed hym and smote vpon hym fyue or sixe strokes flatlynge on the neck that he made hym to falle vpon the nose, & thenne sir Trystram yede his waye and armed hym and tooke his hors and his man, and soo he rode in to that forest. And there vpon a daye syr Trystram mette with two brotheren that were knyghtes with kynde Marke, and there he strake of the hede of the one, & wounded the other to the dethe, and he maade hym to bere his broders hede in his helme vnto the kynde, and thyrty moo there he wounded. And whan that knyght came before the kynde to saye his message, he there dyed afore the kynde and the quene. Thenne kynde Marke called his councell vnto hym, and asked aduyse of his barons what was best to doo with sire Trystram.
Syr said the barons in especyal Syre Dynas the Seneschal, syr, we will yeue you councellyll for to sende for sir Trystram, for we wille that ye wete, many men wille holde with syre Trystram, and he were hard bestade. And syr said sire Dynas ye shalle vnderstande that sir Trystram is called pyerles and makeles of ony Crysten knyghte, and of his myghte and hardynes we knewe none soo good a knyght, but yf hit be sire Launcelot du lake. And yf he departe from your Courte and goo to kynde Arthurs courte, wete ye wel he wille gete hym suche frendes there that he wylle not sette by your malyce.
And therfore syre I councelye yow to take hym to youre grace. I wylle wel said the kynde that he be sente for, that we maye be frendes. Thenne the Barons sente for syr Tristram vnder a saif conduyte. And soo whan syr Tristram came to the kynge, he was welcome, and no reheursall was made, and there was game and playe, and thenne the kynge and the quene wente on huntynge and sir Tristram.

Capitulum xxxiii.

The kynge and the quene made their paeulions & theire tentes in that forest besyde a Ryuer, and ther was dayly huntynge and justynge, for there were euer xxx knyghtes redy to juste vnto alle thom that came in at that tyme. And there by fortune came sire Lamerak de galys and sir Dryaunt, and there syre Dryaunt justed ryght wel, but at the laste he had a falle. Thenne sire Lamerak proffered to juste. And whan he began he ferd so with the thyrty knyntes that there was not one of hem but that he gaf hym a falle, and somme of them were sore hurte. I merueyle said kyng Mark what knyght he is that doth suche dedes of armes. Sir said sire Tristram, I knowe hym wel for a noble knyght, as fewe now ben lyuynte, and his name is sire Lamorak de Galys, it were grete shame saide the kynge that he shold goo thus aseye onles that somme of you mette with hym better. Syre said syre Tristram me semeth it were no worship for a noble man to have adoo with hym. And for by cause at this tyme he hath done over moche for ony meane knyghte lyuynte, therfore as me semeth hit were grete shame and vlyony to tempte hym ony more at this tyme, in soo moche as he and his hors are very bothe. For the dedes of armes that he hath done this daye and they be wel consydered, it were ynough for sir Launcelot du lake.

As for that said kyngge Marke I requyre you as ye loue me and my lady the Quene La beale Issoud take youre armes and juste with sire Lamorak de Galys. Syre said sir Tristram ye byd me doo a thynge that is ageynst knyghthode. And wel I can deme that I shal gyue hym a falle. For hit is no maystry, for my hors and I ben fresshe bothe, and so is not his hors and he, and wete ye wel, that he wil take hit for grete vnkyndenes, For euer one good is lothe to take another at disauffle. But by cause I wil not displease yow, as ye requyre me, soo wille I do and obeye your commandemé. And soo sire Trisram armed hym and took his hors, & putt hym forth, and there sire Lamorak mette hym myghtely, and what with the myght of his owne sper, and of sire Trisrams sper eyr Lamoraks hors felle to the erthe, and he syttyng in the sadel. Thenne anone as lyghtly as he myghte he auoyded the sadel and his hors, and put his shelde afore hym and drewe his swerde. And thenne he badde sir Trisram alyghete thou knyght and thou darst. Nay said sire Trisram I wil no more haue adoo with the, for I haue done to the ouer moche vnto my dishonour and to thy worship. As for that said sire Lamorak I can the no thanke, syn thou hast foreiuyst me on horbak I requyre the and I bische the, and thou be sir Trisram, fyghte with me on foothe. I wylle not soo saide ore Trisram. And wete ye wel my name is sire Trisra de lyones, and wel I knowe ye be sire Lamorak de Galys. And this that I haue done to you was agynst my wylle, but I was requyred thereto, but to saye that I wille doo atte youre request, as at thys tyme I wil haue no more adoo with you, for me shanemeth of that I haue done. As for the shame said sire Lamorak on thy party or on myne, beare thou hit & thou wilt. For though a marve sone hath sayled me, now a Queene sone shalle not sayle the. And therefore and thou be suche a knyghte as men calle the, I requyre the, alyghte, and fyghte with me. Syre Lamorak said sire Trisram I understande youre herte is grete, and cause why ye have, to saye the sothe, for hit wold greue me and ony knyght shold kepe hym freese, and thenne to stryke doune a very knyghte, for that knyght nor hors was never foruerm that alwey myght stáde or endure. And therefore said sire Trisram I wille not have adoo with you, for me forthyketh of that I haue done, as for that said sire Lamorak I shal quyte you and euer I see my tyme.
Capitulum xxxiii.

Soo he departed from hym with sire Dryaun, and by the weye they mette with a knyght that was sente from Morgan le Fay vnto kynge Arthur, and this knyght hadde a fayre horne harneyst with gold, and the horne had suche a vertue that ther myght no lady ne gentilwoman drynke of that horne, but yf she were true to her husband. And yf she were fals she shold spyle all the drynke. And yf she were true to her lord she myght drynke pesyble, and by cause of the quene Gueneuer and in the despyte of sire Launcelot this horne was sente vnto kynge Arthur, and by force sire Lamorak made that knyghte to telle alle the cause why he bare that horne. Now shalte thou bere this horne sayd Lamorak vnto kyng Marke or els chese thou to dye for it. For I telle the playnly in despyte and repree of sire Tristrams thou shalte bere that horne vnto kynge Marke his vnkel, and say thou to hym that I sent hit hym for to assay his lady. And yf she be true to hym he shal preue her. Soo the knyghte wente his weye vnto kynge Marke and broughte hym that ryche horne, and sayd that sir Lamorak sente hit hym, and there to he told hym the vertue of that horne. Thenne the kynge madde Quene Isoud to drynke therof, and an honderd ladyes, and there were but four ladyes of alle tho that dranke cleene. Alas saide kynge Marke this is a grete despyte, and sawe a grete othe, that she shold be brent and the other ladyes.

Thenne the Barons gadered them to gyder and said playnly they wold not have tho ladyes brente for an horne made by sorcery that came from as fals a sorceresse and wytche as tho was lyuyng. For that horne dyd neuer good but caused stryf and debate, and alwayes in her dayes she had ben an enemy to alle true louers. Soo there were many knyghtes made their aowo, and euer they met with Morgan le Fay that they wold shewe her short curtesye. Also sir Tristram was passyng wrothe that sire Lamorak sente that horne vnto kynge Marke for wel he knewe that hit was done in the despyte of hym. And therfor he thoughte to quyte sire Lamorak. Thenne syre Tristram vszed dayly and nyghte to go to quene Isoud whanne he myght, and euer syre Andred his cosyn watched hym nyght and daye for to take hym with la Beale Isoud. And soo vpon a nyght syre Andred aspyed the houre and the tyme whan sir Trystram wente to his lady. Thenne syre Andred gate vnto him twelue knyghtes, and at mydnyght he sette vpon sire Tristram secretely and sodenly, and there sire Tristram was taken naked a bedde with la beale Isoud, and thenne was he boaid hande and fot, and soo was he kepte vntyl dayes. And thenne by the assent of kynge Marke and of syr Andred and of somme of the Barons syre Tristram was ledde vnto a chappel that stode vpon the see rockes there for to take his jugement, and soo he was ledde bounden with fourty knyghtes. And whan sire Tristram sawe that there was none other boote, but nedes that he must dye, thenne said he fayr lorde remembre what I have done for the Countreye of Cornewaile, and in what jeopardy I have ben in for the wele of you alle. For whan I fowrt for the truage of cornewaile with sir Marhaus the good knyght, I was promysed for to be better rewarded, whanne ye alle refussee to take the bataille, therfore as ye be good gentyl knyghtes, see me not thus shamefully to dye, for it is shame to alle knyghthode thus to see me dye. For I dare saye said sire Tristram that I neuer met with no knyght but I was as good as he, or better. Fy vpon the said syr Andred fals traitour that thou arte with thym ausacynge, for alle thy boost thou shalt dye this daye. O Andred Andred said sir Tristram thou sholdest be my kynnesman, and now thou art to me ful unfrendely, but and there were no mo but thou and I, thou woldest not putte me to deth. No said sir Andred, and ther with he drewe his sword, and wold have slayne hym. Whanne sire Tristram sawe hym mak suche countenaunce, he loked vpon bothe his handes that were fast bounden vnto two knyghtes, and sodenly he pulled them bothe to hym, and vnwarst his handes, and thenne he lepte vnto his cosyn syr Andred and wrothe his swerd oute of his handes, thenne he smote sir Andred that he fyll to the erthe, and soo sire Tristram foughte tyll that he hadde kylld x knyghtes. Soo thenne sire Tristram gate the chappel and kepte hit nyghtely, thenne the crye was grete, and the peple drewe faste vnto sire Andred moo than an honderd. Whanne sir Tristram sawe the peple drawe vnto hym he remembryd he was naked, & spend fast the chappel dore and brake the barrys of a wyndowe, and soo he lepte oute and fylle upon the crackys in the see. And so at that tym he Andred nor none of his felawes myghte gete to hym at that tym.

Capitulum xxxv.

Soo whanne they were departed, Gouernaile and sire Lambegus and sire Sentraile de lusnon that were sir Tristrams men soughte their maister. Whanne they herd he was escaped, thenne they were passeynge gladde, and on the rockes they fend hym, and with tuels they pulled him vp. And thenne sire Tristram asked hem where was la beale Isoud, for he wende she had ben had aveye of Andreds peple.
Syr said Gouernaile she is put in a lazare cote. Allas said syre Trys-tram this is a ful vngoodely place for suche a slyre lady. And yt I maye she shalle not be longe there. And soo he took his men and wente there as was la Beale Isoud, and fette her aveye and brughte her in to a forest to a slyre manoyre, and sire Tristram there abode with her.

Soo the good knyghtes badde his men goo from hym. For att this tym he maye not helpe you, soo they departed alle sauf Guernaile. And soo upon a daye sir Tristram yede in to the forest for to disporte hym, and thenne hit happend, that there he felle on slepe.
And there came a man that sire Tristram afore hand had slayne his broder. And whan this man hadde fouđ hym he shotte hym thourou the sholdor with an arow, and sir Tristram lepte vp and kyld that man. And in the meane tym it was told kynge Marke, how sir Tristram and la beale Isoud were in that same manoir, and as soone as euer he myght thryder he came with many knystes to sley sir Tristram. And whanne he came there, he fend hym gone, and there he took la beale Isoud home with hym, and kepte her strayte that by no meane neuer she myght wete nor sende vnto Trystram nor he vynte her. And thenne whanne syre Tristram came toward the old manoir, he fond the trak of many horses, and ther by he wiste his lady was gone. And thenne sir Tristram took grete sorou, and endured with grete payne long tyme, for the arowe that he was hurte with al was enuenyed.

Thenne by the meane of la Beale Isoud she told a lady that was cosyn vnto dame Bragwayne, and she came to sir Tristram and told hym that he myght not be hole by no meane, For thy lady la beale Isoud maye not helpe the, therfore she byddeth you haste in to Bretayne to kyngg Howel, and there ye shal fynde his douster Isoud la blauanche maynys, and she shal helpe the. Thenne sir tristram and gouernaile gat them shyppyng, and soo saileth in to Bretayne. And whan kyngg Howel wist that it was sir tristram, he was ful gladde of hym. Syre he said I am comen in to this countrey to have help of your daugther. For hit is tolde me, that there is none other may hele me but she, and soo within a whyle she heled hym.

Capitulum xxxvi.

There was an Erie that hyghte Gryp. And this Erie maade grete werre vpon the kyng, and putte the kyng to the worse, and bysaged hym. And on a tyme syre kehydyus that was sone to kyngg Howel, as he yassued oute, he was sore wounded nyghe to the dethe.

Thenne Gouernaile wente to the kyng and said, syre I counseyle you to desyre my lord syre Tristram as in your nede to helpe you. I wille doo by your councelye the kyng, and soo he yede vnto syr Trystram and praid hym in his warres to helpe hym, for my sone syr kehydyus may not goo in to the felde. Sire said sir Tristram I wille goo to the felde and doo what I maye. Thenne sir Tristram yssued out of the towne with suche felauhip as he myght make; and dyd suche dedes that alle Bretayne speake of hym. And thene at the last by grete myghte and force he slewe the Erie Gryp with his owne handes, and moo than an honderd knyghtes he slewe that daye. And thenne sire Tristram was receyued worshipfully with procession. Thenne kyngg Howel enbraced hym in his armes, and said sire Tristram alle my kyngdome I wille resygne to the. God defende said sir Tristram, For I am beholden vnto you for youre daugtherers sake to doo for you.
Thenne by the grete meanes of kynge Howel & kehydyus his sone by grete profess there grewe grete loue betwixe Isoud and sire Trystram, for that lady was bothe good and sayre, and a woman of noble blood & fame. And for by cause sir Trystram had suche chere and Btychesse and alle other pleasance that he hadde, all moost he hadde forsaken la beale Isoud. And soo vpon a tyme sir Trystram agreed to wedde Isoud la blanche maynys. And at the laste they were wedded, and solemnly held theyr maryage. And soo whanne they were abedde bothe, sire Trystram remembreth hym of his oyled lady la beale Isoud. And thenne he toke suche a thought sodenly that he was alle desmayed, and other chere maade he none but with clypyngye and kyssyngye as for other fleasely lustes sire Trystram neuer thoughte nor hadde adoo with her. suche mencyon maketh the freushe booke.

Also it maketh mencyon that the lady wende there had ben no plesyryr but kyssyngye and clypyngye. And in the meane tyme there was a knyght in Bretayne his name was Suppnabyles, and he came ouer the see in to England. And thenne he came in to the court of kynge Arthur, and there he met with sir Launcelot du lake, and told hym of the maryage of syre Trystram. Thennne said sire Launcelot, Fy vpon hym vntrue knyghte to his lady that soo noble a knyghte as sir Trystram is shold be foide to his fyurst lady fals, la beale Isoud, quene of Cornewaile. But saye ye hym this, said sire Launcelot that of alle knyghtes in the world I loued hym moost, and had moost joye of hym, and alle was for his noble dedes, and lete hym wete the loue bitwene hym and me is done for euer. And that I gyue hym warynge from this daye forth as his mortal enemy.

Capitulum xxxvii.

Thenne departed syr Suppnabyles unto Bretayne ageyne, and there he fond sir Trystram, and told hym, that he had ben in kynge Arthurs courte. Thennne said sir Trystram herd ye ony thynge of me. Soo god me help saide syre Suppnabyles, there I herd sire Launcelot speke of you grete shame, and that ye be a fals knyght to your lady, and he bad me doo you to wete that he wille be your mortal enemy in every place where he may meete you. That me rep­penteth said Tristram, for of alle knyghtes I loued to be in his felau­ship. Soo syre Tristram made grete mone and was ashamed that noble knyghtes shold deffame hym for the sake of his lady. And in this meane whyle la beale Isoud maade a letter vnto Quene Guen­neuer complaynyng her of the vntrouthe of sir Tristram and how he hadde wedded the kynges daughter of Bretayne. Quene Gueneuer sente her another letter, and hadde her be of good chere, for she shold have joye after sorow, for sire tristram was so noble a knyyst called, that by craftes of sorcery ladyes wolde make suche noble men to wedde them, but in the ende Quene Gueneuer said hit shal be thus, that he shalle hate her, and loue you better than euer he dyd to fore.

So leue we sire Trystram in Bretayne and speake we of sire Lamerak de galys, that as he sayled his shyp felle on a rok and peryushed all, saue sire Lamerak and his squyer, and there he swam myghtely, and fysahers of the yle of seruage toke hym vp and his squyer was drowned, and the ship men had grete labours to saue sire Lameraks lyf, for alle the comfort that they coude doo, and the lord of that yle hyght syre Nabon le noyre a grete myghty gyant. And this sir Nabon hated alle the knyghtes of kynge Arthurs, and in no wyse he wold doo hem fauoure. And these fysahers told sir Lamerak alle the gyse of syre Nabon, how there came neuer knyghte of kynge Arthurs but he destroyed hym. And atte last battle that he dyd was alayne syr Nanowne le petyte, the which he put to a shamef­ul dethe in despyte of kyng Arthor, for he was drawn lyyme meale. That forthynketh me said sir Lamerak for that knyghtes dethe, for he was my cosyn. And yf I were at myn ease as wel as euer I was I wold reuenge his dethe. Fees sayd the fysahers and make here no worde, for or euer ye departe from hens syre Nabon must knowe that ye haue ben here, or els we shold dyde for your sake. So that I be hole said Lamerak of my disease, that I haue taken in the see. I wille that ye telle hym that I am a knyyst of kyng Arthurs, for I was neuer aferd to reneye my lord.
Capitulum xxxviii.

Now tourne we vnto sire Trystram that vpon a daye he took a lytel Barget and his wyf Isoud la blauche maynys with sire kay he dyus her broder to play hem in the costes. And when they were from the land, there was a wynde drofe hem in to the coste of Walys vpon this yle of seruage, where as was syre Lamosak and there the Barget all to rofe, and there dame Isoud was hurte, and as wel as they myste they gate in to the forest, and there by a welle he sawe Segwarydes and a damoysel. And themne eyther salewed other. syre sayde Segwarydes I knowe you for sire Trystram de Liones the man in the world that I haue moost cause to hate by cause ye departed the loue bitwene me and my wyf, but as for that sayd Segwarydes, I wil neuer hate a noble knyzt for a lyxt lady. And therfore I pray you be my frende and I wille be yours vnto my power, for wete ye wel, ye are hard bestad in this valey; and we shalle haue ynoough to doo eyther of vs to suoure other. And themne sir Segwarydes brought sir Trystram to a lady there by that was borne in Cornewaile, and she tolde hym alle the peryls of that valey, and how ther cam neuer knyght there but he were taken prysoner or slayne. Wete you wel fair lady said sir Trystram that I slewe sire Marhaus and deluyed Cornewaile from the truage of Irland. And I am he that deluyed the kyng of Irland from sire Blamor de ganys, and I am he that bete sire Palamys, and wete ye wel I am sire Trystram de lyones that by the grace of god shalle deluyer this woful yle of seruage. So sir Trystram was wel eased. themne one told hym there was a knyghte of kyng Arthurs y' was wrackyd on the rockes. What is his name said sir Tristram. We wote not said the fysahers but he kepeth it no councel but that he is a knyghte of Kyng Arthurs, and by the myghty lord of this yle he seteth nought by. I praye you said sir Tristram and ye maye bryngye hym hyder that I maye see hym. And yf he be ony of the Knyghtes of Arthurs, I shalle knowe hym. Themne the lady prayed the fysahers to bryngye hym to her place. Soo on the morowe they brouzt hym thyder in a fysahers rayment. And as soon as sire Tristram sawe hym he smyled vpon hym and knewe hym wel, but he knewe not sir Tristram. Fair sir saide sire Tristram me semeth by your chere ye haue ben diseased but late, and also me thynketh I shold knowe you here to fore. I wille wel said sir Lamorak that ye haue sene me and mette with me.
Fair sir saide sir tristram telle me your name, vpon a couenaunt I wil telle you said sir Lamorak, that is, that ye wil telle me whether ye be lord of this Iland or noo, that is called Nabon le noyre. For sothe said sir tristram I am not he nor I hold not of hym, I am his fuu as wel as ye be, and soo shal I be foide or I deparde oute of this
yle. Wel said sir Lamorak syn ye haue saide soo largely vnto me, My name is sire Lamorak de galis sone vnto kyng Pellinore, for sothe I trowe wel said sir tristram, for and ye said other, I knowe the contrary. What are ye saide syre Lamorak that knoweth me. I am sir Trystram de lyones. A syre remembre ye not of the falle ye dyd yeue me ones, and after ye refused me to fghte on foot, that was not for fere I had of you said sire Tristram, but me shamed att that tym to haue more a doo with you, for me semed ye hadde ynough, but sire Lamorack for my kyndenes many ladies ye putte to a repreef, whan ye sente the horne from Morgan le fay to kyng Marke where as ye dyd this in despyte of me. Well said he, and it were to doo aegyne, soo wold I doo, for I had leuer stryf and debate felle in kyng Marks courte rather than Arthurs courte, for the honour of bothe courteous be not y lyke. As to that said sir Tristram I knowe wel. But that that was done it was for despyte of me, but alle youre malyce I thanke god hurte not gretely. Therfor said sir Tristram ye shal leue alle your malyce, and soo wille I and lete vs assay hou we may wynne worship bitwene you and me vpon this gyant sir Nabon le noyre, that is lord of this Iland to destoye hym. Sir said sir Lamorak now I vnderstande your knyghthode, it maye not be fals that alle men saye, for of your bounte nobles and worship of alle knyghtes ye are pyeries. And for your curtosy and gentilies I shewed you vngentilnesse, & that now me repenteth.
In the mean time there came word that Sir Nabon had made a crye that all the people of that place should be at his castle the fift day after. And the same day the sons of Nabon should be made knightes, and all the knightes of that vally and there about should be there to judge, and all those of the Royamme of Logrys should be there to judge with them of Northwales, and thither came fyue hundred knightes, and they of the country brought thither seven Sirs Lamerak and Sir Tristram and Sir Kheydus and Sir Segwarides, for they durst none other wyse doo, and then Sir Nabon lent seven Sirs Lamerak hors and armour at Sir Lamerak's desire, and Sir Lamerak justed and dyed suche dedes of armes that Nabon and all the people said there was never knyt that euer they sawe do suche dedes of armes, for as the Frenshe booke saith he foristed alle that were there for the most party of fyue hundred knightes that none abode hym in his sadel.
Then Sir Nabon profered to playe with hym his playe, for I sawe neuer no knighte doo so moche upon a daye. I wole well sayd Sir Lamerak playe as I may but I am very and sore brysed, and there eyther gate a spere, but Nabon wolde not encounter Sir Lamerak, but smote his hors in the forhede and soo sawe hym, and then Sir Lamerak yede on foote and torned his sheldre and drewe his sword, and there beganne stronge bataill on foote. But Sir Lamerak was so sore brysed and shorte brethed that he tracyd and trauercyd somewhat abak. Fair felawe said Sir Nabon hold thy hand and I shalle shewe the more curteysye, than euer I shewed knyght, by cause I haue sene this daye thy noble knyghthode. And therfore stand thou by and I wil wete whether ony of thy felawe selle haue ado with me. Thenye whan Sir Tristram herd that, he stepte forth and said Nabon lende me hors and sure armour and I wille haue ado with the. Wel felawe said Sir Nabon goo thou to yonder paulyone and arme the of the best thou fyndest there, and I shalle playe a meruellous playe with the. Thenye said Sir Tristram loke ye playe wel or els persauentur I shalle lerne you a new playe, that is wel said felawe said Sir Nabon. So whan Sir Tristram was armed as hym lyked best and wel shelded and swered, he dressid to hym on foot. For wel he knewe that syr Nabon wold not abyde a stroke with a sperre, therfore he wold selle alle knyghtes horses. Now fair felawe said sir Nabon lete ys playe. Soo thenne they foughte longe on footo tracynge and trau-ercynge, smytynge and foynynge longe withoute ony rest. Atte last sir Nabon praid hym to telle hym his name. Syre Nabon I telle the my name is sir Tristram de lyones a knyxt of Cornewail vnnder kyngge Marke. thou art welcome said sir nabon, for of alle knyghtes I haue moost desyred to fyghe with the or with sir Launcelot. Soo thenne they went egerly to gyders and sire Tristram slewe sire nabon, and soo forth with he lepte to his sone, and strake of his heede, and thenne al the countrey sayde, they wold holde of sire Tristram, nay saide sire Tristram I wille not soo, here is a worshipfull knyght sir Lamorak de galys that for me he shalle be lord of this countreye, for he hath done here grete dedes of armes. nay said sir Lamorak I wil not be lord of this countreye, for I haue not deserued it as wel as ye, therfore gyue ye hit where ye wille for I will none haue. Wel saide sire Tristram syn ye nor I wille not haue hit, let vs yeue hit to hym that hath not so wel deserued hit. Doo as ye lyst said Segwarydes, for the yefe is yours for I wil none haue and I had deserued hit. Soo was it yeuen to segwarydes wherof he thanked hem, and soo was he lord, & wor-shipfully he dyd gouerne hit. And thenne sir Segwarydes deleyuerd alle prysoners and sette good gouernans in that valey, and soo he torned in to Cornewaile, and told kyngge Mark and la beale Isoud how sir Tristram had aunounced hym to the yle of seruage, and there he proclaimed in al Cornewaile of alle the adventures of these two knyghtes, so was hit openly knowne. But ful wo was la Beale Isoud when she herd telle that sire Tristram was wedded to Isoud la blauchne maynys.

Capitulum xl.

Soo torne we vnto sir Lamorak that rode toward Arthurs courte, and sire Tristrams wyf and Kheydyus took a vessel and sailed in to Bretayne vnto kyngge Howel where he was welcome. And when he herd of these aduëtures they merueilled of his noble dedes. Now torne we vnto sir Lamorak that whan he was departed from sire Tristram, he rode oute of the forest tyll he came to an hermytage. Whan the hermyte sawe hym, he asked hym from whens he came. sir said sir Lamorak I come fro this valey, sir said the hermyte therof I merueille. For this xx wynter I sawe neuer no knyght passe this countrey, but he was other slayne or vylaynously wounded or passe as a poure prysoner. Tho ylle customs said sir lamorak are fordone, for sir Tristram slewe your lord syr Nabon and his sone. theenne was the hermyte gladde and all his bretheren, for he said ther was neuer suche a tyraunt among crysten men. And therfor said the hermyte this valey and fraiccis we wille holde of sire Tristram. Soo on the morowe sir Lamorak departed. And as he rode he sawe four knyghtes fyghte augeynst one, and that one knyght defended hym wel, but atte last the four knyghtes had hym doun. And theenne sir Lamorak wente betwixe them, and asked them why they wold akee that one knyght, and said hit was shame four augeynst one. Thou shalt wel wete said the four knyghtes that he is fals. that is your tale said sir Lamorak. And whanne I here hym also speke, I wille say as ye saye. Thenne said Lamorak, a knyght can ye not excuse you, but that ye are a fals knyghte. Syr said he yet can I excuse me both with my word & with my handes, that I wille make good vpon one of the best of them my body to his body. Thenne speke they al attones, we wil not jeopardy our bodyes as for the. But wete thou wel they saide and kynge Arthur were here hym self it shold not lye in his powere to saue his lyf. That is to moche said, said sire Lamorak, but many speke behynde a man more than they wylle saye to his face. And by cause of your wordes ye shall vnderstande that I am one of the sympleste of kynge Arthurs courte, in the worship of my lord now doo your best, and in despyte of you I shalle rescowe hym. And theenne they lasshed al at ones to sir Lamorak, but anone at two strokes syre Lamorak had slayne two of them, and theenne the other two fledde. Soo theenne sire Lamorak torned augeyne to that knyghte, & asked hym his name. syre he sayde my name is sire Frolfle of the oute Iles, theenne he rode with sire Lamorak and bare hym company. And as they rode by the waye, they sawe a semely knyght rydynge augeynst them, and all in whyte. A said Frof yonder knyght justed late with me and smote me doune, therefor I wil juste with hym, ye shal not doo soo said sire Lamorak by my counseil, and ye wille telle me your quarel whether ye justed at his request, or he at yours. Nay said sir Frol, I justed with hym at my request. Syr said Lamorak, thene wil I coucisle you dele no more with hym, for me semeth by his countenonce he shold be a noble knyght, and no japer, for me thynketh, he shold be of the table round, therfor I wil not spare said sir Frol, and thenne he cryed and said, sir knyzt make the redy to just. That nedeth not said the whyte knyghte. For I haue no luste to Juste with the, but yet they feutryd theyr speres, and the whyte knyghte ouerthrowe sire Frol, and thene he rode his waye a softe pass. Thenne sir Lamorak rode after hym, and praid hym to telle hym his name, for me semeth ye shold be of the felauship of the round table. Vpon a couenaunt said he I wille telle you my name, soo that ye wylle not discouer my name, and also that ye wille telle me yours. Thenne said he my name is sir Lamorak de galy. And my name is sir Launcelot du lake. them they putte vp their suerdas, and kyssed hertely to gyders, and eyder made grete joye of other. Syr said sir Lamorak and hit please you I wyl do you seruyse. God defende said Launcelot that ony of soo noble a blood as ye be shold doo me seruyse. Thenne he saide more I am in a quest that I must doo my self alone. Now god speke you said sir Lamorak, and so they departed. Thenne sir Lamorak came to sir Frol and horded hym aseyne, what knyght is that said sir Frol, sir he said it is not for you to knowe nor it is no poyn te of my charge. ye are the more vncurteisa saide sire Frol, and therefor I wylle departe fro you. ye may doo as ye lyt said sire Lamorak, and yet by my company ye haue saued the fayrest floure of your garland, soo they departed.

Thenne within two or thre dayes syr Lamorak fond a knyghte at a well alepynge, and his lady sate with hym and waked. Ruyght so came sir Gawayne and toke the knyghte's lady, and sette her vp behynnde his auyer. Soo syre Lamorak rode after syre Gawayne, and said sire Gawayne, torne ageyne. And thenne said sir Gawayne what wylle ye do with me, for I am neuesw vnto kynge Arthure. syre said he for that cause I wil spare you, els that lady shold abye wyth me, or els ye shold Juste with me. Thenne sire Gawayne turned hym and ranne to hym that ought the lady with his sperre, but the knyght with pure myght smote doune syre Gawayne, and took his lady with hym. Alle this sir Lamorak saw and said to hym self, but I reuenge my felawe, he will saye of me dishonour in kyunge Arthurs courte. Thenne sire Lamorak retorned and proffered that knyght to juste. Syr said he I am redy, and there they came to gyders with alle their myght, and there sire Lamorak smote the knyght thorou both sydes, that he fylle to the erthe dede. thenne that lady rode to that knyghtes broder that hyght Belliauce le orgulus, that duelled fast therby, and thenne she told hym how his broder was slayne. Allas said he I wille be reuengyd, and soo he horsed hym, & armed hym, and within a whyle he ouertook syre Lamorak, and badde hym torne and leue that lady, for thou and I must playe a newe playe, for thou hast slayne my broder syre Frol that was a better knyghte than euere werde thou. It myghte wel be said sir Lamorak, but this day in the felde I was fouéd the better. Soo they rode to gyder, and unhorsed other, & turned their sheldes, and drewe their swordes, and foughte myghtely as noble knyghtes preued by the space of two houres. So thene sire Belliaunce prayed hym to telle hym his name. Syr said he my name is sire Lamorak de galys. A said syr Belliaunce, thou arte the man in the world that I moost hate, for I slewe my sones for thy sake, where I saued thy lyf, and now thou hast slayne my broder syr Frol. Allas how shold I be accorded with the, therefore defende the, for thou shalt dye ther is none other remedy. Allas said sir Lamorak ful wel me ought to knowe you, for ye are the man that moost haue done for me. And there with alle sire Lamorak knelyd doune, and bisought hym of grace. Aryse said sire Belliaunce, or els there as thou knelest I shalle slee thee. That shal not nede saide sire Lamorak, for I wyl yeolde me vnto you, not for fere of yow, nor for your strengthe, but your goodenes maketh me ful loth to haue adoo with you, wherfore I requyre you for goddes sake, and for the honour of knyghte forgyue me al that I haue offended vnto you. Alas saide Belleaunce leue thy knelynge or els I shal sée the withoute mercy. Thenne they yede ageyne vnto batai1, and either wounded other than al the ground was blody there as they foughte. And at the laste Belleaunce withdrew his hym abak and sette hym doune softly vpon a lytil hylle, for he was so saynte for bledyng that he myght not stande. Thenne sire Lamorak threwe his shelde vpon his bak, and asked hym what chere. Wel said syr Belleaunce. A syr yet shalle I shewe you faueour in your male esse. A knyght syr Belleaunce said syr Lamorak thou art a foole, for and I had had the at suche auauntage as thou hast done me I shold sée the, but thy gentynes is so good and so large, that I must nedes forgyue the myn euylle wil. And thenne sire Lamorak knelyd adoune, and vnlaied fyrst hym vnderer, and thenne his owne, and thenne eyther kyssed other with wepyng teres. Thenne sire Lamorak ledd sire Belleaunce to an Abbey fast by, and there sire Lamorak wold not departe from Belyaunce tyl he was hole. And thenne they were to gyders that none of hem shold never fyghte ageynst other. So syre Lamorak departed and wente to the courte of kyngge Arthur.

Here leue wo of sire Lamorak and of sire Tristram. And here beginneth the historye of La cote male tage.
T the Courte of kynge Arthur there cam a yonge man and bygly made, and he was rychely bysene, and he desyred to be made knyghte of the kynge but his ouer garmet sat ouerthwartly, how be hit, hit was ryche clothe of gold. What is your name said kynge Arthur. Syre saide he, my name is Breunor le noyre, and within shorte space ye shalle knowe that I am of good kyn. It maye wel be said sir kay the Seneschal, but in mockage ye shalle be called la cote male tayle, that is as moche to saye the euyl shapen cote. Hit is a grete thynge that thou askest said the kynge. And for what cause werest thou that ryche cote, telle me, for I can wel thynke for somme cause hit is. Syre he anuered I had a fader a noble knyght. And as he rode on huntyng upon a daye hit happed hym to leye hym doune to slepe. And there came a knyght that had ben longe his enemy. And whan he sawe he was fast on slepe, he alle to hewe hym. And this same cote had my fader on the same tyme, and that maketh this cote to sytte soo euyl vpon me, for the strokes ben on hit as I fond hit, and neuer shalle be amendyd for me. Thus to haue my faders dethe in remembrance I were this cote ty! I be reuengyd, and by cause ye are callyd the moost noblest kynge of the world I come to you that ye shold make me knyght. Sir said sir Lamorak and sir Gaherys, hit were wel done to make hym knyght, for hym besemeth wel of persone, and of countenance, that he shal preue a good man and a good knyght, and a myghty, for sire and ye be remembryd euyn suche one was sire launcelot du lake, whanne he came fyrste in to this Courte, and full fewe of vs knewe from whens he came, and now is he preued the man of moost worship in the world, and all your courte and alle your Round table is by sire launcelot worshipped and amended more than by ony knyghte now lyuynge. that is truthe saide the kynge, and to morou att your request I shalle make hym knyght. So on the morou there was an herte founden, and thys rede kynge Arthur with a company of his knyghtes to slye the herte. And this yonge man that sire kay named la cote male tayle was there lefte behynd with Quene Gueneuer, and by sodeyne aduenture ther was an herryble lyon kepte in a stronge Tourre of stone and it happend that he at that tyme brake loos, and came hurlynge afofe the Quene & her knyghtes. And whanne the Quene sawe the lyon, she cryed and fledde, and praide her knyghtes to rescowe her. And there was none of hem alle but twelue that abode, and alle the other fledde. Thenne saide La cote male tayle Now I see wel that alle coward knyghtes ben not dede, and there with alle he drewe his swerd, and dressad hym afofe the lyon. And that lyon gaped wyde and came vpon hym raumpynge to haue slayne hym. And he thenne smote hym in the myddes of the hede suche a myghty stroke, that it clefe his hede in sonder, and dassoed to the erthe. Thenne was hit tolde the Quene how the yonge man that sire kay named by scorn La cote male tayle hadde slayne the lyon. With that the kyng came home. And whanne the Quene tolde hym of that aduenture, he was wel pleased, and said, vpon payne of myn hede he shalle preue a noble man and a feythful Knyghte and true of his prouyse, thenne the kynge forth with al made hym knyght. Now sire said this yonge knyght I requyre you and alle the knyghtes of youre courte, that ye call me by none other name but la cote male tayle, in soo moche as syr kay hath soo named me, soo wille I be called, I assente me wel theerto said the kynge.

Capitulum secundum.

Thenne that same daye there came a damoyssel in to the courte, and she brought with her a grete black sheled, with a whyte hand in the myddes holdynge a swerd. Other pyctour was there none in that sheled. Whan kynge Arthur sawe her, he asked her from whens she came, and what she wold. Syr she said I haue ryden longe and many a day with this sheled many wayes, and for this cause I am come to your courte. There was a good knyght that ought this sheled, & this knyght had undertak a grete dede of armes to enchieue hit, and soo it mysfortuned hym, another stronge knyght met with hym by sodeyne aduenture, and there they fought longe, & eyther wounded other passynge sore, and they were soo wery, that they lefte that battaille even hand. Soo this knyghte that ought this sheled sawe none other way but he must dye, & thene he commaunded me to bere this sheled to the Courte of kynge Arthur, he requyrynge and prayenge somme good knyzt to take this sheled, and that he wold fulfylle the quest that he was in. Now what saye ye to this quest said kynge Arthur. Is there ony of you here that wille take vpon hym to welde this sheled. Thenne was there not one that wold speke one word, thenne sir kay took the sheled in his handes. Sire knyzt said the damoyssel what is your name. Wete ye wel said he my name is sir kay the seynchal that wyde where is knowen. Syr said that damoyssel laye doune that sheled, for wete ye wel it falte not for you, for he must be a better knyzt than ye, that shalle welde this sheled. damoyssel sayd syr kay wete ye wel I toke this sheled in my handes by youre leue, for to behokl it not to that entent, but goo where someuer thou wilt, for I will not go with you. Thenne the damoyssel stode stytte a grete whyle and byheld many of the knyghtes. Thenne spak the knyght La cote male tayle, fayre damoyssel I wille take the sheled and that aduenture vpon me, soo I wyst I shold knowe, wheder ward my journey myght be, for by cause I was thys daye made knyght I wold take this adventyre vpon me.

What is your name fayre yonge man said the damoysel. My name is said he la cote male tayle. Wel mayst thou be called so said the damoysel, the knyzt with the eylle shapen cote, but & thou be soo hardy to take vpon the to bere that shedde and to folowe me, wete thou wel, thy skyn shalle be as wel hewen as thy cote. As for that said la cote male tayle when I am soo hewen I wille aske you no salue to hele me with alle. And forth with all ther came in to the Court two squyres & broust hym grete horses and his armour and his spere, and anone he was armed and tooke his leue. I wold not by my will said the kynge that ye took vpon you that hard adventure. sir said he, this adventure is myn, and the fyrst that euer I took vpon me, and that wille I folowe what someuer come of me. Thenne that damoysel departed, and la cote male tayle fast folowed after. And within a whyle he ouertook the damoysell and anone she myssaid hym in the fowlest maner.

Capitulum Tercium.

Thenne sire kai ordelyn sir dagenet, kynge Arthurs foole to folowe after la cote male taile, and there sire kai ordelyn that sire Dagenet was horded and armed and bade hym folowe la cote male taile, and profer hym to juste and soo he dyd, and whan he sawe la cote male tayle he cryed and baddymake hym redy to juste.
Soo sire la cote male tayle smote sire Dagenet ouer his hors croupe.
Thenne the damoysel mocked la cote male tayle, and said fy for shame, now art thou shamed in Arthurs courte, when they sende a foole to have adoo with the, and specially at thy fyrst Justes, thus she rode longe and chyde. And within a whyle there came sire Bleoberys the good knyght, and there he justed with la cote male tayle, and there syre Bleoberys smote hym so sore that hors and alle felle to the erth. Thenne la cote male tayle arose vp lyghtely and dresses his shed, and drewe his suerd and wold haue done bataill to the vterate, for he was wode wrothe. Not soo said Bleoberys de ganys, as at this tyme I wille not fyghte vpon foote. Thenne the damoysel Maledysaút rebuked hym in the foulest maner, and badde hym torne awaye coward. A damoysel he said I pray you of mercy to mys-saye me no more, my gryef is ynough though ye gyue me no more, I calle my self neuer the wers knyght, when a marys sone fayleth me, and also I compte me neuer the wers knyght for a falle of sir Bleoberys. Soo thus he rode with her two dayes, and by fortune there came sir Palomydes and encountred with hym, and he in the same wyse serued hym as dyd Bleoberys to fore hand. What dost thou here in my felauship saide the damoysel maleysaunt, thou canst not sytte no knyghte, nor withstande hym one buffet, but ye hit were sir dagonet. A fair damoysel I am not the wers to take a falle of sire Palamydes, and yet grete disworship haue I none, for neyder Bleoberys nor yet palamydes wold not fyghte with me on foote. As for that saide the damoysel wete thou wel they haue desdayne and scorne to lyghte of their horses to fyghte with suche a lewd knyght as thou arte. Soo in the meane whyle ther cam sir Mordred, sir Gawyns broder, and soo he felle in the felauship with the damoysel maleysaunt. And thenne they came afore the castel Orgulous, and there was suche a customme that there myght no knyght come by that castel, but outhere he must juste or be prysoner, or at the lest to lese his hors and his harneis. and there came oute two knyghtes ageynst them, and sir Mordred justed with the fornest, and that knyght of the castel smote sire Mordred doune of his hors, and thenne la cote male tayle justed with that other, and eyther of hem smote other doune hors and alle to the erthe. And whanne they auoyded their horses, thenne eyther of hem took others horses.

And thenne la cote male tayle rode vnto that knyght that smote doune sire Mordred and justed with hym. And there syre La cote male tayle hurte & wounded hym passyngore and putte hym from his hors as he had ben dede. So he torne vnto hym that mette hym afore, and he took the flyght toward the castel, and sire la cote male tayle rode after hym in to the Castel Orgulous, and there la cote male tayle slewe hym.

And anon there came an honderd knystes about hym and assayled hym, and when he sawe his hors shold be slayne, he alyghte and voydeth his hors, & putte the brydel under his feete, and so put hym out of the gate. And when he had soo done, he hurled in amonghe hem, and dressid his bak vnto a ladyes chamber walle, thynkyenge hym selde that he had leuer dye there with worship, than to abyde the rebukes of the damoysel Malelysant. And in the meane tyme as he stood & fousat, that lady whos was the chamber wente oute styly at her posterne, and without the gates she fond la cote male tayles hors and lyghtly she gate hym by the brydel, and teyed hym to the posterne. And thenne she wente vnto her chambre styly agayn for to behold hou that one knyghte sough agaynst an honderd knyghtes. And when she had behold hym longe, she wente to a wyndowe behynde his bak, and said thou knyght thou fyghtest wonnderly wel, but for alle that at the last thou must nedes dye. But and thou canst thoro thy mystys prowesse wyynne vnto yonder posterne, for there haue I fastned thy hors to abyde the, but wete thou wel thou must thynke on thy worship, & thynke not to dye, for thou maiste not wyynne vnto that posterne without thou doo nobly and myghtly. Whan la cote male tayle herd her saye so, he gryped his swerd in his handes and putt his sheld fayre afore hym, & thoro the thyczest prees he thruled thoro[them]. And when he came to the posterne, he fond there redy four knyghtes, and at two the fyrst strokes he slewe two of the knyghtes, & the other felded, & soo he wanne his hors and rode from them, and alle as it was it was reherced in kyngge Arthurs courte, hou he slewe twelue knyghtes within the castel Orgulouis, and so he rode on his waye. And in the meane wyylde the damoysel said to sir Mordred I wyne my foolynge knyst be outhre slayn or také prysone, thene were they ware where he came rydyng. And when he was come vnto them, he told alle how he hadde spedde, and escaped in despyte of them alle, and somme of the best of hem wille telle no tales. Thou lyest falsly saide the damoysel, that dare I make good, but as a foole and a dastard to alle knyghthode, they haue lethe the passe, that may ye preue said La cote male tayle. With that she sente a curroure of hers that rode alweye with her for to knowe the trouthe of this dede; and so he rode thydder lyghtly, and asked bow and in what maner that la cote male tayle was escaped oute of the castel. Thenne alle the knyghtes curryd hym and said that he was a fende and noo man. For he hath slayne here twelue of oure best knyghtes, & we wende vnto this daye that hit had ben to moche for sir laicelot du lake or for sire Tristram de lyones. And in despye of vs alle he is departed from vs and maugre our hedes.

With this answere the currour departed and came to Maledy-saunt his lady, and told her alle how syr la cote male tayle had spedde at the castel Orgulous. Thenne she smote down her heed, and sayd lytel.

By my hedie said sir Mordred to the damoysel ye are gretely to blame so to rebuke hym, for I warne you playnly he is a good knyghte, and I doubte not, but he shalle preue a noble knyghte, but as yet he may not yet sytt sure on horsbak, for he that shalle be a good horsman, hit must come of vsage and excercyse. But when he cometh to the stroke of his swerd, he is the newe noble and myghty, and that sawe sire Bleoberys and sir Palamydes, for wete ye wel they are wyly men of armes, and anon they knowe whan they see a yonge knyghte by his rydyng, how they ar sure to yeue hym a falle from his hors or a grete buffet. But for the moost party they wille not lyghte on foote with yonge knyghtes. For they are wyght and strongly armed. For in lyke wyse sir launcelot du lake whan he was fyrste made knyghte he was often putte to the wors on horsbak, but euer vpon foote he recooured his renomme, and slewe and defoyled many knyghtes of the round table. And therfor the rebukes that sir Launcelot dyd vnto many knyghtes causeth them that be men of prowesse to beware, for often I haue sene the old preued knyghtes rebuked and slayne by them that were but yonge begynners. Thus they rode sure talkynge by the way to gyders.

Here leue we of a whyle of this tale and speke we of sire Launcelot du lake.
Capitulum Quintum.

That when he was come to the courte of kyng Arthur, the name he telle of the yonge kynghtes la cote male tayle how he slewe the lyon, and how he tooke vpon hym the adventure of the black shelde, the whiche was named atte that tyme the hardyest adventure of the world. Soo god me saue said sire Laücelot vnto many of his felawes, it was shame to alle the noble knyghtes to suffre suche a yonge knyghte to take suche adventure vpon hym for his destructyon, for I wille that ye wete said sire launcelot, that that damoyesel maledysaunt hath born that shelde many a day for to seche the most proued knyghtes, and that was she the Breunys saunce pyte took that sheld from her, and after Tristram de lyones rescowed that shelde from hym, and gaf it to the damoysell ageyne.

A lytil afore that tyme that sire Tristram fought with my newewe sire Blamore de Ganys for a quarel that was betwixe the kyng of Irland and hym. Thenne many knyghtes were sory that sire La cote male tayle was gone forth to that adventure. Truly said sire launcelot, I cast me to ryde after hym, and within seuen dayes sire launcelot ouertook la cote male tayle. And thenne he salewed hym, and the damoysel maledysaunt.

And whan sire Mordred sawe sire laücelot, thenne he lefte their felauanship, and soo sire launcelot rode with hem al a day, and euer that damoysel rebuked la cote male taille, and thenne sire launcelot anuerd for hym, thenne he lefte of, and rebuked sire launcelot. Soo this meane tyme syre Tristram sente by a damoysel a letter vnto sire launcelot excusynge hym of the weddynge of Isoud la blanche maynys, and said in the letter as he was a true kynt, he hadde neuer adoo fleshly with Isoud la blanche maynys, and passyng curteisly & gentelly sire tristram wrote vnto sire launcelot, euer be-sechynge hym to be his good frende, & vnto la beale Isoud of Cornwaile, and that sire Launcelot wold excuse hym ye that euer he sawe her. And within shorte tyme by the grace of god said sire Tristram that he wold speke with la Beale Isoud and with hym ryghte fastely. Thenne sire Launcelot departed from the damoysel & from syr la cote male taile for to ouersee that letter, and to wryte another letter vnto syre Tristram de lyones, and in the meane whyle la cote male tayle roode with the damoyssel vntil they came to a castel that hyght Pendragon, and there were syxe knyghtes stode afore hym, and one of hem profered to juste with la cote male tayle. And there la cote male tayle smote hym ouer his hors croupe. And thenne the fyue knyghtes sette vpon hym all at ones with their spere, & there they smote la cote male tayle doune hors and man. And thenne they alyght sodenly, and sette their handes vpon hym all attones, and toke hym prysoner, and soo ledde hym vnto the castel, & kepte hym as prysoner. And on the morne sir Launcelot arose and deluyerd the damoyssel with letters vnto sir Tristram, & thenne he took his way after la cote male tayle, & by the waye vpon a brydge thare was a knyghte profered sire Launcelot to juste, and sire Launcelot smote hym doune, and thenne they foughte vpon foote a noble batail to gyders and a myghty, & at the laste sire Launcelot smote hym doune grouelynge vpon his handes and his knees. And thenne that knyghte yelded hym, and sire launcelot receyued hym fayre. Syr said the knyght I rejoyre the telle me your name, for moche my herte yeuth vnto you. Nay said sire Launcelot as at this tyme I wil not telle you my name, onles thenne that ye telle me your name. Certaynly said the knyght my name is sire Nerouens that was made knyght of my lord sire Launcelot du lake. A Nerouens de lyle said sire Launcelot I am ryght gladd that ye ar proued a good knyghte, for now wete ye wel my name is sire Launcelot du lake. Allas said sire Nerouens de lyle what haue I done, and there with al flatlyng he felle to his feet, and wold haue kyst them, but sire Launcelot wold not lete hym, & thenne eyther made grete joye of other. And thenne sire Nerouens told sir Launcelot that he shold not goo by the castel of Pendragon, for there is a lord a myghty knyght, and many knyghtes with hym, and this nyght I herd say that they toke a knyght prysoner yesterday that rode with a damoyssel, & they saye he is a knyghte of the round table.

A said sir Launcelot that knyght is my felawe, & hym shalle I rescowe or els I shalle lese my lyf theryfore. And there with alle he rode fast tyl he came before the Castel of Pendragon, and anon there with alle there cam vi knyghtes, and alle made hem redy to sette vpon sire Launcelot at ones, thenne sire Launcelot feutyrd his spere, and smote the foremost that he brake his bak in sonder, and thre of them hytte and thre fayled. And thenne sire launcelot past thorou them; and lyghtly he turned in ageyne, and smote another knyghte, thorugh the brest and thorou oute the bak more than an ell, & ther with alle his spere brak.

Soo thenne alle the remensant of the four knyghtes drewe their swerdes and lashed at syre Launcelot. And at every stroke sire launcelot bestowed so his strokes that at four strokes s sondry they suoyded theyr sadels passyngge sore wounded, and forthe with alle he rode hurlynge in to that castel. And anon the lord of the castel that was that tyme cleyed sir Bryan de les yles the which was a noble ma and a grete enmy vnto kyng arthur, within a whyle he was armed and vpon horsbak. And thenne they feutryd their speres and hurled to gyders soo strongly that bothe theire horses rashed to the erthe. And thenne they suoyded their sadels, & dressid their sheldes and drewe their swerdes and flange to gyders as wood men, and there were many strokes yeuen in a whyle. at the last sir launcelot gaf to sir Bryan suche a buffet that he kneeld vpon his knees, and thenne sir launcelot rashed vpon hym, and with grete force he pulled of his helme, and whanne sire Bryan sawe that he shold be slayne he yeled hym and put hym in his mercy and in his grace. Thenne sire launcelot made hym to delyuer alle his paysoners that he had within his castel, and therin sir launcelot fonde of arthurs knyghtes thyrtyt, and xi. ladyses, and soo he delyuerd hem, and thenne he rode his waye, and anon as la cote male tayle was delyuerd he gat his hors and his harneis, and his damoysele Maleysauant, the meane whyre syre Nerouens that sir Launcelot had foughten with alle afores at the brydge, he sente a damoysele after sir Launcelot to wete hou he spedde at the Castell of Pendragon. And thenne they within the castel merueyllde what knyght he was whan syr Bryan and his knyghtes deluercd alle tho prysoners. haue ye no merueille said the damoysel, for the best knyghte in this world was here, and dyd this journye, and wete ye wel she said it was sire launcelott. Thenne was sir Bryan ful gladde and soo was his lady, & alle his knyghtes, that suche a man shold wynne them. And whan the damoysel and la cote male tayle vnderstood that it was syr Launcelot du lake that had ryden with them in felauhip, And that she remembryd her hou she had rebuked hym and callyd hym coward, thenne was she passyng heuy.

Soo thenne they took their horses and rode forth a pas after sire Launcelot. And within two myle they ouertoo hym, and salewed hym, and thanked hym, and the damoysel cryd sir Launcelot mercy of her euyll dede, and sayenge, for now I knowe the floure of alle knyghthode is departd euyn bitwene sire Tristram and you. For god knoweth said the damoysel that I haue soughte you my lord sir Launcelot and sir Tristram longe, and now I thanke god I haue mette with you, and ones at Camelot I mette with sir Tristram, and ther he rescowed this blak sheld with the whyte hand holdynge a naked sword, that sir Bruyns saunce pyt had taken from me. Now sayre damoysel said sir Launcelot who told you my name. Syre said she, there came a damoysell from a knyghte that ye fought with all at the brydge, and she told me your name was sire Launcelot du lake. blame haue she thenne said sire Launcelot, but her lord sire Neroueus hath told her. But damoysel said sire Launcelot vpon this couenaunt I wille ryde with you, so that ye wille not rebuke this knyghte sir La cote male tayle no more, for he is a good knyght and I doubte not he shalle preue a noble knyght, and for his sake and pytte that he sholde not be destroyed, I folowed hym to socoure hym in this grete nede. A, Jhesu thanke you said the damoysel, for now I wil say vnto you and to hym both, I rebuked hym neuer for no hate that I hated hym, but for grete loue that I had to hym. For euer
I suppos'd that he had ben to yonge and to tindy to take vpon hym these adventures. And therfore by my wille I wold haue dryuem hym aweye for jalousy that I had of hys lyf, for it maye be no yong knyghtes dede that shal encheyue this adventure to the ende. Per dieu said sire Launcelot hit is wel said, and where ye are called the damoyesel Maleleysaunt I wille calle you the damoyesel Bien pensaunt, and soo they rode forthe a grete whyle whuto they came to the Bordoure of the countrey of Surluse, and there they fond a fayr vyllage with a stronge brydge lyke a fortresse. And whanne sir launcelot and they were at the bridge, there startes forth afore them of gentilmen and yomen many that saide, Paire lorde ye maye not passe this brydge and this fortresse by cause of that black shielde that I see one of you bere. And therfore there shalle not passe but one of you at ones, therfore chese you whiche of you shalle entre withynne this brydge fyreste. Thenne sir Launcelot profered hym selfe fyrest to entre within this brydge. Syr said La cote male tayle, I biseche you lete me entre within this fortresse, and yf I may spede wel, I will sende for you, and yf it happend that I be slayn, there it goth. And yf soo be that I am a prysoner taken, thenne maye ye rescowe me. I am lothe said sir launcelot to lete you passe this passage. Syre said la cote male tayle I praye you lete me putte my body in this adventure. Now goo youre waye said sire Launcelot, and Jhesu be your sped. So he entrid and anone there mette with hym two bretheren, the one hyrste syr Playne de force and the other hyght sir Playne de amours. And anone they mette with sir la cote male tayle, and fyreste la cote male tayle smote doune Playne de force, and after he smote doune playne de amours, and thenne they dressid them to their shieldes and swerdes, and badde la cote male tayle alyghte, and soo he dyd, and there was dasshyng and fynnyng with swerdes, and soo they began to asaille ful hard la cote male tayle, and many grete woundses they gaf hym vpon his heed and vpon his brest and vpon his sholders. And as he myght ever amonge he gaf sadde strokes agyne.

And thenne the two bretheren traced and trauercyd for to be of bothe handes of sire la cote male tayle, but he by fyne force, & knyghtly prowesse gate hem afore hym. And thenne when he felte hym self soo wounded, thenne he doubled his strokes, & gaf them soo many woundes that he feld them to the erthe, & wold haue slayne them had they not yielded them. And ryzt soo sire la cote male tayle tooke the best hors that there was of them thre, and soo rode forth his waye to the other fortresse & brydge and there he mette with the thyrd broder whose name was sire Plenorius, a ful noble knyghte, and there they justed to gyder, and eyther smote other doun hors and man to the erthe. And thenne they auoyded their horses, and dressid their sheldes, and drewe their swerdes, and gaf many sad strokes, and one whyle the one knyght was afore on the brydge, and an other whyle the other. And thus they foughte two houres and more, and neuer rested. And euer sire Launcelot and the damoysel beheld them. Allas said the damoysel my knyghte fyghteth passyng sore and ouer longe. Now may ye see said sir Launcelot that he is a noble knyghte for to consyde his fyrste bataile, and his greuous woundes. And euen forth with all so wounded as he is, it is merueile that he may endure this longe batail with that good knyghte.

Capitulum Octauum.

This meane whyle syre la cote male tayle sanke ryghte doun vpon the erthe, what forwounded and what forbled he myghte not stande. Thenn the other knyghte hadde pyte of hym, and sayd fayr yonge knyghte desmaye you not, for had ye ben freshe whan ye mette with me, as I was, I wote wel that I shold not haue endured so longe as ye haue done, and therefore, for youre noble dedes of armes, I shall shewe to you kyndenes and gentylnesse in alle that I maye. And forth with al this noble knyghte sir Plenorius took hym vp in his armes, and ledde hym in to his toure. And thenne he commaunded him the wyn, and made to serche hym and to stoppe his bledyng woundes. Syre said la cote male tayle withdrewe you from me, and hybe you to yonder brydge ageyne, for there wille mete with you another maner knyght than euer was I. Why said Plenorius, is there another maner knyght behynde of your fealouship, ye said la cote male tayle, ther is a moche better knyght than I am.
What is his name sayd Plenorius, ye shalle not knowe for me, said la cote male tayle. Wei said the knyght, he shalle be encountred with alle, what someuer he be. Thenne sir Plenorius herd a knyght calle, that sayd syr Plenorius where art thou, outhre thou must de-lyuer me the prysoner that thou hast led vnto thy toure, or els come and doo bataile with me. Thenne Plenorius gat his hors, and came with a sper in his hand wallopynge toward syr launcelot, and themne they beganne to feutre there speres, and came to gyrodes as thonder, and smote eyther other so myghtely that their horses felle doune ynder them. And themne they auoyded their horses, and pulled out their swerde, & lyke two bulles they lasahed to gyrodes with grete strokes and foynes, but euer syr launcelot recouerdel ground vpon hym, and sire Plenorius traced to haue gone aboute hym. But sire launce- lot wold not suffer that, but bare hym backer and backer, tyll he came nynybe his toure gate. And themne said sire launcelot I knowe the wel for a good knyght, but wete thou wel, thy lyf and dethe is in my hand, and therfore yelede the to me, and thy prysoner. The other ansuered no word, but strake mystely vpon sire laucelots helme that the fyre sprange out of his eyen, thenne syre Launcelot doubled his strokes soo thyck, and smote at hym so myghtely that he made hym knele vpon his knees. And there with sire launcelot lepte vpon hym, and pulled hym grouelyng doune. Thenne sir Plenorius yelded hym, and his toure, and alle his prysoner at his wille. thenne sir laun celot receyued hym and took his trouthe, and the he rode to the other brydge, and there sire launcelot justed with other thre of his bretheren, the one hyght Pillounes, and the other hyght Pellogris and the thyrdde sire Pellandris, and fyriste vpon horsbak syr launcelot smote hem doune, and afterward he bete them on foote, and made them to yelede them vnto hym; and themne he retorned vnto sire Plenorius, and there he fond in his pryson kyng Carados of scotland and many other knyghtes, and alle they were deleyerd. And thenne sire la cote male tayle came to sire launcelot, and themne sire launcelot wold haue yeuen hym alle these fortresses and these brydges. Nay said la cote male tayle I wil not haue sire Plenorius lyuelode, with that he wylle graunte you my lord sire launcelot to come vnto kynges Arthurs courte and to be his knyght and alle his bretheren I will pray you my lord to lete hym haue his lyuelode. I wille wel said sire launcelot, with this that he wille come to the Courte of kynge Arthur and become his man, and his bretheren fyue. And as for you sire Plenorius I wille vndertake said sire Launcelot at the next feest soo there be a place voyded that ye shalle be knyght of the round table. Syr said Plenorius atte next feest of Pentecost I wille be at Arthur’s courte, and at that tyme I wille be guyded and ruled as kynge Arthur & ye wille haue me. Thenne sire Launcelot and sire la cote male tayle reposed hem there vnto the tyme that sire la cote male tayle was hole of his woundes, and there they hadde mery chere and good rest and many good gamys, and there were many fayre ladyes.

Capitulum Nonum.

And in the meane whyle came sire kay the seneschal and sire Brandyles, and anone they felaushypped wyth them. And thenne within ten dayes thene departed tho knyghtes of Arthurs Courte from these fortresses. And as sire laücelot came by the castel of Pendragon, there he putte syr Bryan de les yles from his landes, for cause he wold neuer be withhold with kynge Arthur, and alle that castel of Pendragon, and alle the landes therof he gaf to sire la cote male tayle, & thene sire launcelot sente for Neroneus that he made ones knyghte, and he made hym to haue alle the rule of that castel, & of that coun- trey vnder la cote male tayle, and soo they rode to Arthurs courte al holy to gyders. And at Pentecost next folowyng there was sire Plenorius and sire la cote male tayle called otherwyse by ryght syr Breunes le noyre bothe maade knyghtes of the table round, and grete londes kynge Arthur gaf them, and there Breune le noyre wedded that damoyssell Maleysaunt. And after she was called Beau viuante, but euer after for the more party he was called la cote male tayle, and he preued a passyng noble knyghte and myghty, & many worshipful dedes he dyd after in his lyf, and sire Plenorius proud a noble knyght and ful of prowesse, and alle the dayes of their lyf for the moost party they awayted vpon sire laücelot, and sire Plenorius bretheren were euer knyghtes of kynge Arthur. and also as the freneshe book maketh meneyon, syr la cote male tayle auengyd his faders dethe.

Capitulum x.

Now leue we here sire la cote male tayle, and torne we vnto sir Tristrum de lyones that was in Bretayne. Whanne la beale Isoud vnderstode that he was wedded, she sent to hym by her mayden Bragwayne as pytous letters as coude be thoughte and made, and her conclusion was, that, and hit pleasyd syr Tristram, that he wold come to her courte, and brynge with hym Isoud la blanche maynys, and they shold be kepte as wel as she her self. Thenne sir Tristram called vnto hym syr kehydious, and asked hym whether he wold go with hym in to Cornewaile secretely. He anuerd hym that he was redy at al tymes. And thenne he lete ordeyne pryuely, a lytel vesell, and therin they wente syr Tristram, kehydious, Dame Bragwayne and Gouvernaile syr Tristrams squyer. So when they were in the see, a contraryous wynde blewe hem on the costes of North Walyys nygh the castel perylous. Thenne sayd sir Tristram here shalle ye abyde me these ten dayes, and Gouvernaile my squyer with you, And yf so be I come not ageyne, by that daye, take the next way in to Cornewaile, for in thys forest are many straunge aduentures, as I haue herd saye, & somme of hem I caste me to preue or I departe. And whanne I maye, I shalle hybe me after you. Thenne sir Tristram and kehydious took their horses and departed from their felauship. And soo they rode within that forest a myle and more. And at the last sir Tristram sawe afor hym a lykely knyzt armad syttynghe by a Welle, and a stronge myghty hors passyng nyghte hym teyed to an Oke and a man hounge and rydyng by hym ledynge an hors lade with spere. And this knyzhte that satte at (the) Welle, semed by his countenaunce to be passyng heuy. Thenne sire Tristram rode nere hym, and said fayr knyzt why sytte ye soo droupynge, ye sem to be a knyzht erraunt by your armes and harneis, and therfore dresse you to Juste with one of vs or with bothe. There with all that knyzhte made noo worde, but took his sheld and bokeled hit aboute his neck, and lyghtely he took his hors and lepte vpon hym. And thème he took a grete spere of his squier, and departed his waye a furlonge. Sire kehydus asked leue of sir Tristram to juste fyrmst, doo your best said sire Tristram. soo they mette to gyders and there sir kehydus had a falle, and was sore wounded, on hyghe aboue the pappys. Thenne sire Tristram said, knyzt that is wel justed. Now make you redy vnto me. I am redy said the knyght. And thenne that knyght took a grettet spere in his hand, and encountred with sir Tristram, and there by grete force that knyght smote doune sir Tristram from his hors and had a grete falle. Thenne sire Tristram was sore ashamed, and lyghtly he auoyned his hors, and put his sheld afor his sholder and drewe his sward. And thenne sire Tristram requyred that knyghte of his knyghthode to alyghte vpon foote and fyghte with hym. I wille wel saide the knyght, and soo he alyghte vpon foote, and auoyned his hors, and cast his sheld vpon his sholder, and drewe his sward, and therete they fought a longe bataile to gyder ful nyghe two houre.

Thenne sire Tristram said fayr knyght hold thy hand, & telle me of whens thou arte, and what is thy name. As for that said the knyght, I wille be auyseyd, but and thou wolt telle me thy name, paraduenture I wille telle the myn.

Capitulum xi.

Now fayr knyght he said, my name is sire Tristram de lyones.
Syre saide the other knyght, and my name is sir lamorak de galys.
A sire lamorak said sir Tristram, well be we mette, and bethynke the now of the despuyte thou dydest me of the sendyng of the horne vnto kyng Markes courte to the entente to haua slayne or diishonoured my lady the Quene la Beale Isoud, and therfore wete thou wel said sir Tristram the one of vs shall dye or we departe. Sire said sire La-morak, remembre that we were to gyders in the yle of seruage, and at that tyme ye promysed me grete frendship. thenne sire Tristram wold make no lenger delays but lashed at sir Lamorak, & thus they foughte longe, tyl eyder were wery of other. Thenne sire Tristram seid to sir Lamorak in alle my lyf mette I neuer with suche a knyght that was soo bygge and well brethed as ye be, therfore said syre Tristram hit were pyte, that ony of vs both shold here be meschyeued. Syr said sire Lamorak for youre renomme and name I wille that ye haue the worship of this battaile, and therfor I will yeilde me vnto you. And ther with he took the paynte of his swerd to yeilde hym. Nay said sir Tristram ye shalle not doo soo, for wel I knowe your profess and more of your gentylnesse than for ony fere or drede ye haue of me. And there with alle sir Tristram proffered hym his swerde and said sire Lamorak as an ouercomen knyghte I yeilde me vnto you, as to a ma of the most noble prowesse that euer I mette with alle. Nay said sir Lamorak I wille doo you gentylnesse. I requyre yow lete vs be sworne to gyders that neuer none of vs shalle after this day haue adoo with other, and there with alle syre Tristram and sire Lamorak swere that neuer none of hem shold fyghte ageynst other nor for wele, nor for woo.

Capitulum xii.

And this meane whyle there came sire Palomydes the good knyght folowyng the questynge beest that hadde in shap a hede lyke a serpents hede, and a body lyke a lybard, buttocks lyke a lyon, and foted lyke an herte, and in his body there was suche a noyse as hit had ben the noyse of thyrty coupel of houïdes questynge, and suche a noyse that beest made where someuer he wente, & this beest euermore syr palomydes folowed, for hit was called his quest, & ryzt so as he folowed this beest it came by syr Tristram, and soone after cam Palamydes. and to breue this matere, he smote doune sir tristram and sir Lamorak bothe with one spere, and soo he departed after the beste Glatysaunt, that was called the questynge beest, wherfore these two knyghtes were passynghe wrothe, that sir Palomydes wold not fyghte on foote with hem.

Here men may vnderstande, that ben of worship that he was neuer foyrned that alle tymes myght stande, but somtyme he was putte to the worse by male fortune. And at somme tym the wers knyghte putte the better knyghte to a rebuke. Thenne sire Tristram and sire Lamorak gate sire kehydus vpon a shed betwixe them bothe, and ledde hym to a fosters lodge, & there they gaf hym in charge to kepe hym well, and with hym they abode thre dayes.

Themne the two knyghtes toke their horses, and at the crosse they departed. And themne said sir Tristram to sire Lamorak I re- quyre you yf ye happe to mete wyth sir Palamydes, say hym that he shal fynde me atte same Welle there I mette hym, and there I sire Tristram shalle preue whether he be better knyght than I. · and soo eyther departed from other a sondry way, and sire tristram rode ngyhe there as was sire kehydus, and sire Lamorak rode vntyl he came to a chappel, and there he putte his hors vnto pasture, and anone there came sir Melyagaunce that was kynge Bagdemagus sone, & he there putte his hors to pasture, and was not ware of sir lamorak, and thenne this knyght sire Melliagaunce maade his mone of the loue that he hadde to quene Gueneuer, and there he made a woful complaynte. All this herd sire Lamorak, and on the morne sir lamorak took his hors and rode vnto the forest, and there he mette with two knyghtes houyngge vnder the wood shawe. Faire knyghtes said sire Lamorak what doo ye houynege here and watchynge. And yf ye be knyghtes arraunt that wille juste, loo I am redy. Nay sir knyght they said, not soo, we abyde not here for to juste with you, but we lye here in awayte of a Knyghte that selewe our broder.

What knyght was that said sir Lamorak that ye wold sayne mete with all. Syre they said, hit is sire launcelot that selewe oure broder. And yf euer we maye mete with hym, he shal not escape but we shalle alee hym. Ye take vpon you a grete charge saide sire Lamorak, for sire launcelot is a noble proued knyxt. As for that we doute not, for there nys none of vs but we are good ynoogh for hym. I will not bieleue that said sir Lamorak. For I herd neuer yet of no knyght the dayes of my lyf but sir launcelot was to bygge for hym.

Byght soo as they stode talkynge thus, syre Lomorak was ware hou syr launcelot came rydying streyghte toward them, thenne sire Lomorak salewed hym, and he hym aseyne. And thenne sire lomorak asked sir launcelot, yf there were ony thynge that he myght doo for hym in these marches. Nay said sire launcelot not at this tyme. I thanke you. thenne eyther departed from other, and sir Lomorak rode aseyn ther as he left the two knyghtes, and thenne he fond them hydde in the leued woode. Fy on you said sir Lomorak fals cowardes, pyte and shame it is, that ony of you shold take the hybe ordre of knyghthode. Soo sir Lomorak departed fro them, and within a whyle he mette with sire Melygaunce. And thenne syre Lomorak asked hym, why he loued Quene Gueneuer as he dyd, for I was not fer from you whanne ye made your complaynte by the chappell. Dyd ye soo said sir Melygaunce, thenne wille I abyde by hit, I loue quene gueneuer what wille ye with hit, I wille preue and make good, that she is the fayrest lady and moost of beaute in the world. As to that said sire Lomorak I say nay thereto, for quene Morgause of Orkeney moder to sire Gawayne and his moder is the fayrest quene and lady that bereth the lyf. That is not so sayd syre Melygaunce, and that wille I preue with my handes vpon thy body. Wille ye soo said sire Lomorak, and in a better quarle kepe I not to fyghte. Thenne they departed eyther from other in grete wrathe. And thenne they came rydyng to gyder as hit had ben thosander, and eyther smote other so sore that their horses felle bakward to the erthe. And thenne they auxyded their horses and dressid their sheldes, and drewe their swerdes. And thenne they hurttid to gyders as wykyd bores, and thus they fought a grete whyle. For Melygaunce was a good man and of grete myght, but sire Lomorak was hard bygge for hym, and putte hym alweyes a bak, but eyther had wounded other sore. And as they stode thus fyghtynge, by fortune came sire Launcelot and sire Bleoberys rydyinge. And thenne sire launcelot rode betwixt them, and asked them, For what cause they fought soe to gyders, and ye are bothe knyghtes of kynge Arthur.

Capitulum xiii.

Syr said Melyagnaunce I shalle telle you for what cause we doo this battaille. I prayse my lady Quene Gueneuer, and said she was the fayrest lady of the world, and sire Lamerak said nay therto. For he said quene Morgause of Orkeney was fayrer than she and more of beaute. A syre Lamerak why saist thou soo, hit is not thy parte to dispraye thy pryncesse that thou arte vnder their obeysaunce and we alle, and there with he alyghte on foote, and sayd for this quarel make the redy. For I wille preue vpon the, that Quene Gueneuer is the fayrest lady and most of bounte in the world. Syre said sire Lamerak I am loth to haue adoo with you in this quarell. For euery man thynketh his owne lady fayrest, and though I prayse the lady, that I loue moste, ye shold not be wrothe, For though my lady quene Gueneuer be fayrest in your eye, wete ye wel Quene Morgause of Orkeney is fayrest in myn eye, and soo euery knyght thynketh his owne lady fayrest, and wete ye wel syr ye are the man in the world exepte sire Tristram, that I am moost lothest to haue adoo with alle.
But and ye wille nedes fyghte with me I shal endure you as longe as I may. Thenne spake sire Bleoberys, and said, my lord sire Launcelot, I woste you neuer soo mysauysed as ye are now. For syre Lamerak saith you but reason and knyghtely. For I warne you I haue a lady, and me thynketh that she is the fayrest lady of the world.
Were this a grete reason that ye shold be wrothe with me for suche langage. And wel ye wote, that syr Lamerak is as noble a knyght as I kowse, and he hath oughte you and vs euery good wille, and therefore I praye you be good frendes. Thenne sire Launcelot sayd vnto sire lamerak, I pray you foryeue me myn euylle wylle, And yf I was mysauysed I wille amende hit. Syre sayde sire Lamerak the amendys is soone made betwixt you and me. And soo sire Launcelot and sire Bleoberys departed, and syr Melyagnaunce and sire Lamerak took their horses, and syther departed from other. And within a whyle came kynge Arthur and mette with sir Lamorak and justed with hym, and there he smote doune sire Lamorak, and wounded hym sore with a spere, and soo he rode from hym, wherfore sir Lamorak was wrothe that he wold not fyghte with hym on foote, hou be it that sire Lamorak knewe not kynge Arthur.

Capitulum xv.

Now leue we of this tale, and speke we of sire Tristram, that as he rode he mette with sir kay the seneschal and there sire kay asked sir Tristram of what courey he was, he answerd that he was of the countrey of Cornewail. Hit maye wel be said sire kay, for yet herd I neuer that euery good knyghte came oute of Cornewalle. that is euyl spoken said sir Tristram, but and it plesse you to telle me your name I requyre you. Syre wete ye wel said sire kay that my name is sire kay the seneschal. Is that your name said sire Tristram, now wete ye well that ye are named the shamefullest knyghte of youre tonge that now is lyuyng, how be it ye are called a good knyght, but ye are called vnfortunate, and passyng ouerthwarte of your tonge. And thus they rode to gyders tyl they came to a brydge. And there was a knyghte wold not lete hem passa, tyl one of hem justed with hym, and so that knyzt justed with sir kay, and there that knyght gaf sir kay a falle, his name was sire Tor syre Lamoraks half bruder, and thenne they two rode to theyre lodgyng. And there they fonde sire Brandyles, and sir Tor came thyder anone after.

And as they satte atte souper these foure knyghtes, thre of them spak alle shame by Cornyashe knyghtes. Syr Tristram herd alle that they saide, and he sayd but lytell, but he thoughte the more, but at that tymhe he discouerd not his name. Vpon the morne sir Tristram took his hors, and abode them vpon their way. And there syre Brandyles proferd to juste with sir Tristram, and sir Tristram smote hym doune hors and alle to the erthe. Thenne sire Tor le fye de vayshoure encountred with syre Tristram, and there sire Tristram smote hym doune, and thenne he rode his waye, and sir kay folowed hym, but he wold not of his felauship. Thenne sire Brandyles came to sir kay, and said I wold wete fayne what is that knyghtes name. Come on with me said sir kay, and we shall praye hym to telle vs his name. Soo they rode to gyders, tylle they came ngyhe hym, and thenne they were ware where he sat by a Welle, and had putte of his helme to drynke at the Welle. And whanne he sawe them come, he laced on his helme lyghtly, and took his hors, and proferd hem to juste. Nay said syre Brandyles we justed late ynough with you, we come not in that entent. But for this we come to requyre you of knyghthode to telle vs your name. My fayre knyghtes sythen that is your desyre, and to please you ye shal wete that my name is sir Trystram de lyones nueewe vnto kynge Mark of Cornewayle. In good tyme saide sire Brandyles, and wel be ye fonden, and wete ye wel that we be ryght gladde that we haue fonde you, and we be of a felauship that wold be ryzt glad of your company. For ye are the knyghte in the world that the noble felauship of the round table moost desyreth to haue the company of. God thanke them said sir Trystram of theyre grete goodenes, but as yet I seale wel that I am vsably to be of their felauship. For I, was neuer yet of suche dedes of worthynes to be in the company of suche a felauship. A sayde sire kay and ye be syre Trystram de lyones ye are the man called now moost of prowesse excepte sir launcelot du lake. For he bereth not the lyf crysten ne bethen that can fynde suche another knyght to speke of his prowesse and of his handes and his trouthe with alle. For yet coude there neuer creature saye of hym dishonour and make hit good. Thus they talked a grete whyle, and themne they departed eyther from other suche weyes as hem semed best.

Capitulum xvi.

Now shall ye here what was the cause that kynge Arthur cam in to the forest perillous, that was in North Walys by the meanes of a lady, her name was Annowre, and this lady came to kynge Arthur at Cardyf, and she by fayre promyse and fayre bihestes maade kynge Arthur to ryde with her in to that forest perillous, and she was a grete sorceresse, and many dayes she hadde loued kynge arthur, and by cause she wold haue hym to lye by her, she came in to that Countrey. Soo whanne the kyng was gone with her, many of his knyghtes folowed after kyng Arthur, whom they myst hym, as sir launcelot, Braundyles and many other. and when she had brought hym to her toure, she desyred hym to lye by her, and thenne the kyng remembreth hym of his lady, and wold not lye by her for no crafte that she coude doo. Thenne euery daye she wolde make hym ryde in to that forest with his owne knyghtes to the entent to haue had kyng Arthur slayne. For whan this lady annoure sawe that she myst not haue hym at her wille, thenne she laboured by fals meanes to haue destroyed kyng Arthur and slayne. Thenne the lady of the lake that was alwey freundely to kyng Arthur, she vnderstoode by her subtyl crafte that kyng Arthur was lyke to be destroyed. And thence this lady of the lake that hyght Nyneue cam in to that forest to seke after sire Launcelot du lake, or sire Tristram for to helpe kyng Arthur, for as that same day this lady of the lake knew the kyng Arthur shold be slayne, onles that he hadde helpe of one of these two knyghtes, and thus she rode vp and doue tyl she mette with sire Tristram, and anon as she sawe hym, she knewe hym. O my lord sire Tristram she said well be ye mette, and blesse be the tyme that I haue mette with you, for this same day, and within these two houres shalle be done the foulest dede that euer was done in this land. O fair damoyseel said sire Tristram maye I amende hit. Come on with me she said and that in alle the haste ye maye, for ye shal see the most worshipfullest knyght of the world hard bestad. Thence said sire Tristram I am redy to helpe suche a noble man, he is neither better ne wors said the lady of the lake but the noble kyng Arthur hym self. God defende said sir Trystram that euer he shold be in suche distresse. Thence they rode to gyders a grete pas vntyl they came to a lytel turret or castel, and vndernethe that castel they sawe a knyghte standyng vpon foote fyghtynge with two knyghtes. And soo sire Tristram bihold them, and at the laste the two knyghtes smote doune the one knyghte, and that one of hem vnlaicd his helme to haue slayne hym. And the lady Annoure got kyng Arthurs suerd in her hand to haue stryken of his hede. And there with alle came sire Tristram with alle his myghte, cryenge, Traytresse, Traytresse leue that, And anone there sire Tristram smote the one of the knyghtes thorou the body that he felle dede, and thene he rashed to the other, and smote his bak in sonder, and in the meane whyle the lady of the lake cryed to kyng Arthur lete not that fals lady escape. Thenne kyng Arthur ouertoke her, and with the same swerd he smote of her heed, and the lady of the lake took vp her heed and henge hit vp by the heyre of her sedel bowe. And thenne sir Tristram horsed kyng Arthur, and rode forth with hym, but he charged the lady of the lake not to discouer his name as at that tyme. When the kyng was horsed, he thanked hertely sire Tristram, and desyred to wete his name, but he wold not telle hym, but that he was a poure knyght auenturous, and soo he bare kyng Arthur felauhip tyl he met with somme of his knyghtes. And within a whyle he mette with sir Ector de marys, and he knewe not kyng Arthur nor sir Tristram, and he desyred to juste with one of hem. Thenne sire Tristram rode vnto sir Ector, and smote hym from his hores. And whanne he hadde done soo, he cam ageyne to the kyng, and said my lord yonder is one of your knyghtes, he may bere you felauhip, and another day that dede that I haue done for you I truste to god ye shalle wnderstande that I wold do you seruyse. Alas said kyng Arthur lete me wete what ye are. Not at this tyme said sir Tristram. Soo he departed and lefte kyng Arthur and sir Ector to gyders.

And thence at a day sette sire Tristram and sire Lamorak mette at the Welle, and thence they took kehydus at the fosters hous, and soo they rode with hym to the ship, where they lefte dame Brangwayne and Gouernayle and soo they sayed in to Cornewaile all holy to gyders, and by assent and enformacyon of dame Brangwayn whan they were landed they rode vnto sire Dynas the seneschal, a trusty frende of sir Tristrams, and soo dame Brangwayne and syre Dynas rode to the courte of kyng Markes, and told the quene la Beale Isoud that sir tristram was nyghte her in that countrey, thence for very pure joye la beale Isoud swounded, & when she myghte speke, she said gentyl knyzt Seneachall help that I myght speke with hym, outher my herste wille brast.

Thenne sir Dynas and dame Brangwayne broughte syre tristram and kehydious pryuely vnto the courte vnto a chamber where as la beale Isoud hadde assygned hit, and to telle the joyes that were betwixe la beale Isoud and sire tristram, there is no tongue can telle it, nor herte thynke hit, nor pen wryte hit. And as the Frenshe book maketh mencyon at the fyrst tyme that euer sire kehydious sawe la beale Isoud, he was soo enamoured vpon her, that for very pure loue he myghte neuer withdrawe hit. And at the last as ye shall here or the book be ended, sire Kehydius dyed for the loue of la beale Isoud, and thenne pryuely he wrote vnto her letters and ballades of the moost goodlyest that were vse in tho dayes. And whanne La beale Isoud vnderstood his letters she hadde pyte of his cōplaynt, and vnaussed she wrote another letter to conforte hym with alle. And sire tristram was alle this whyle in a turret and the commande-ment of la beale Isoud, and when she myght, she came vnto sire tristram. So on a day kyng Mark played at the chesse vnder a chamber wyndowe, and at that tyme sire tristram and sire Kehydius were within the chamber ouer Kyng Markes, and as it myshapped sire tristram fonde the letter that Kehydius sent vnto la beale Isoud, also he had foid the letter that she wrote vnto Kehydius, & at that same tyme la Beale Isoud was in the same chamber. Thenne sire Tristram came vnto la Beale Isoud and said, Madame here is a letter that was sente vnto you, and here is the letter that ye sent vnto hym that sente you that letter. Allas madame the good loue that I have loued you, and many landes and rychesse have I forsaken for your loue, and now ye are a traytresse to me the whiche dothe me grete Payne, but as for the sire kehydius I broughte the outhe of Bretayne in to this Cōtray, and thy fader kyng Heowl I wanne his landes, how be it I wedded thy syster Isoud la blancke mayny for the goodenes she dyd vnto me. And yet as I am true knyghte she is a clene mayden for me, but wete thou wel syr Kehydious for this falsheede and treason thou hast done me, I wille reuenge hit vpon the. And there with alle sire Tris- tram drewe oute his swerw, and said sire kehydious kepe the, and thenne la Beale Isoud swounded to the erthe. And whanne sire kehydius sawe sir tristram come vpon hym, he sawe none other bote, but lepte oute at a bay wyndowe euen over the hede where sat kyng Marke playenge at the cheesse. And whanne the kyng sawe one come hurlynge over his hede, he sayd, Felaue what arte thou, and what is the cause thou lepest oute at that wyndowe. My lord the kyng saide Kehydius, hit fortuned me that I was a slepe in the wyndowe aboue your hede, and as I slepte I slommeryd, and soo I felle doune. And thus sir kehydius excused hym.

Capitulum xiii. (xvii.)

There sawe sir Tristram drekke sore lest he were discouerd vnto the kyng that he was there, wherfore he drewe hym to the strengthe of the Toure, and armed hym in suche armour as he had for to fyghte with hem that wold withstande hym. And soo whanne sire Tristram sawe there was no resistence aegynst hym, he sente Gouernaille for his hors and his spere, and knyghtely he rode forth oute of the castel openly that was called the castel of Tyntagil. And euen atte gate he mette with Gyngalyn sir Gawayne sone. And anone sire Gyngalyn putte his spere in his reyste, and ranne vpon sire Tristram and brake his spere, and sire Tristram at that tyme had but a swerd, and gaf hym suche a buffet vpon the helme that he fylle doune from his sadel, and his swerd slode adowne, and carf a sonder his hors nekke. And so sire tristram rode his waye in to the forest, and alle this doyng sawe kyng Mark. And thenne he sente a squyer vnto the hurte knyghte and commanded hym to come to hym, and soo he dyd. And whanne kyng Mark wyst that it was sir Gyngalyn, he welcomed hym, and gaf hym an hors, and asked hym what knyght hit was that had encoétred with hym. Syr sawe gyngalyn, I wote not what knyst he was, but wel I wote that he syggeth and maketh grete dole. Thenne sir Tristram within a whyle mette with a knyght of his owne that hyghte sir Fergus. And whan he had mette with hym he made grete sorowe in so moche that he felle doune of his hors in a swoune, and in suche sorowe he was in thre dayes and thre nyghtes. Thenne at the lasse sir Tristram sent vnto the courte by sir Fergus for to sper what tydynge. And so as he rode by the way he met with a damoysel that came from sir Palomydes to knowe and seke how sir Tristram dyd. Thenne sir Fergus tolde her, how he was al most out of his mynde. Alas said the damoysel where shalle I fynde hym. In suche a place said sire Fergus. Thanne sir Fergus fond Quene Isoud seke in her bedde, makyng the grettest dole that euer ony ethely woman made. And when the damoysel fonds sire Tristram, she made grete dole by cause she myst not amende hym, for the more she made of hym, the more was his payne. And at the last sir Tristram toke his hors and rode aweye from her. And thenne was it thre dayes or that she coude fynde hym. And thenne she broughte hym mete and drynke, but he wold none, and thenne another tyme sir Tristram escaped aweye from the damoysel, and it happed hym to ryde by the same castel where sire Palomydes and sire Tristram dyd bataille whan la beale Isoud departed them. And there by fortune the damoysel mette with sire Tristram ageyne makyng the grettest dole that euer ethely creature made, and she yede to the lady of that castel, and tolde her of the mysanturte of sire Tristram. alas said the lady of that castel, where is my lord sire Tristram. Ryght her by your castel said the damoysel. In good tyme asside the lady, is he soo nyghte me, he shalle haue mete and drynke of the best, and an harp I haue of his, where vpon he taught me. For of goodely harpyng he bereth the pryce in the world. So this lady and damoysel brought hym mete and drynke, but he ete lytel thereof. Thenne vpon a nyght he putte his hors from hym. And thenne he unlace his armoure, and thenne sir Tristram wold go in to the wildernes and brast doune the trees and bowes, and other whyle whan he fond the harp that the lady sente hym, thenne wold he harpe and playe therupon, and wepe to gyders, and somtyme when sire Tristram was in the woode that the lady wysst not where he was, thenne wold she sytte her doune and playe vpon that harp. Thenne wold sire Tristram come to that harp, and herken ther to, and somtyme he wold harp hym self. Thus he there endured a quarter of a yeare, thine at the last he ranne his way, and she wiste not where he was become. And thenne was he naked and waxed lene, and poure of fleshe, and soo he felle in the felauship of herd men and shepherdes, and dayly they wold gyue hym somme of their mete & drynke. And when he dyd say shrewd deede, they wold bete hym with roddes, and soo they clyped hym with sheres and made hym lyke a fool.

And upon a day Dagonet kynge Arthurs fooles came in to Comewaile with two squyers with hym, and as they rode thorugh that forest, they came by a fayre welle, where sir Tristram was wonte to be, and the whether was hote, and they alghte to drynke of that welle, and in the mean whyle their horses brake lous. Ryght soo sire Tristram came vnto them, and fyrst he soneyd sire Dagonet in that welle, & after his squyers, and there at lough the shepherds, and forth with al he name after their horses and broughte hem ageyne, one by one, and ryghte soo wete as they were, he made hem lepe vp, and ryde their wayes. Thus sire Tristram endured there an halfe yere naked, and wold neuer come in towne, ne vyllage. The mean whyle the damoyzel that syre Palomydes sente to seke sire Tristram she yede vnto sir Palomydes, and told hym alle the meschyf that sir Tristram endured. Alle sayd sir Palomydes hit is grete pyte that euer soo noble a Knyght shold be soo mescheneed for the lune of a lady. But neuertheles, I wille goo and seke hym, and comforte hym and I may. Thence a lytel before that tymes is Beale Isoud had commanded sir Kehydius outhe of the Country of Comewaile. Soe sir Kehydius departed with a dolorous herte, and by adventure he mette with sir Palomydes, and they enfelsauhrpped to gyder, and eyther complayned to other of theire hote lune that they loused la beale Isoud. Now lete vs sayd sir Palomydes seke sire tristram that loused her as wel as we, and lete vs preue whether we maye recouer hym. Soo they rode in to that forest, and thre dayes and thre nghtes they wold neuer take their lodgyne but euer soughte sir tristram. And upon a tym the aduenture they mette with Kynges Mark that was ryden from hyss men al alone. Whanne they saue hym, syre palomydes knewe hym, but sir Kehydius knewe hym not. A fals kynges said sir Palomydes, it is pyte thou hast thy lyf. For thou arte a destroyer of alle worshipful Knyghtes, and by thy meschyef and thy vengeasunce thou hast destroyed that mooste noble Knyght sire tristram de lyones. And therfor defende the said sir Palomydes, for thou shalt dye this day. that were shame said Kyng Mark, for ye two are arme and I am vnamme. As for that said sir Palomydes I shalle fynde a remedy therfore, here is a Knyxt with me, and thou shalt haue his harneis. Nay said kyng Mark I wille not haue adoo with yow for cause haue ye none to me. For alle the mysaye that sir tristram hath, was for a letter that he fownd, for as to me I dyd to hym no displeasyre, and god knoweth I am ful sory for his disease and malady. Soo when the kyng had thus excused hym, they were frenedes, and kyng Mark wold haue had them vnto tyntagil, but syr Palomydes wolde not but torned vnto the Realme of Logrys, and sir khydious iside that he wolde goo in to Bretayn.

Now torne we vnto sir Dagonet ayene that whanne he and his squyers were vpon horsbak, he demyd that the shepherdes had sende that foole to araye hem so, by cause that they laughed at hem, and soo they rode vnto the kepers of beeetes and alle to bete them. Syr tristram sawe them bete that were wonte to gyue hym mete and drynk, thienne he ran thryder, and gat sir Dagonet by the hede, and gaf hym suche a falle to the erthe, that he bryxed hym sore so that he lay stylle. And thenne he wrast his swerd oute of his hand. And ther with he ranne to one of his squyers, and smote of his hede, & the other feld. And soo sir Tristram took his waye with that swerd in his hand rennynge as he hadde ben wylde woode. Thenne sir Dagonet rode to kyng Mark and told hym hou he had spedde in that forest. And therfore said sir Dagonet, Beware kyngge Mark that thou come not aboute that welle, in the forest. For there is a foole naked, and that foole and I foole mette to gyders, and he hadde almost slayn me. A said kyngge Mark, that is sir Matto le breune, that felle oute of his wytte by cause he lost his lady. For whan sir Gaherys smote doune sir Matto and wanne his lady of hym, Neuer syns was he in his mynde, and that was pyte, for he was a good knyght.
Thennne sir Andred that was cosyn vnto sir Tristram, made a lady that was his paramour to say and to noyse hit that she was with sire Tristram or euer he dyed. And this tale she broughte vnto kyng Marke marke courte that she buryed hym by a welle, and that or he dyed, he besoughte kyng Marke to make his cosyn sir Andred kyng of the countre of Lyonas, of the whiche sir Trystram was lord of. Alle this dyd sir Andred by cause he wold haue had sire tristrams lades. And whanne kyng Mark herd telle, that sir tristram was dede, he wepte, and made grete dole. But whanne quene Isoud herd of these tydnyges, she maade suche sorowe, that she was nuyge oute of her mynde. And soo vpon a day she though she thought to see her self; and neuer to lyue after sir tristrams deth. And soo vpon a day in beale Isoud gat a swerd pryuely, and bare hit in to her gardyn, and there she pyghte the swerd thorugh a plume tree vp to the hyltes, soo that hit stak fast and hit stode brest hyhe. And as she wold haue ronne vpon the swerd and to haue slayne her self alle this aspyed kyng Marke, how she kneled doune and saide, swete lord Jhesu haue mercy vpon me, for I maye not lyue after the deth of syr Tristram de lyones, for he was my fryst loue, and he shalle be the last, and with these wordes came Kyng mark and took her in his armes, and thenne he took vp the swerd and bare her away with hym in to a Toure, and there he made her to be kept and watched her surely, and after that she lay longe seke nys at the poynote of deth. This meane whyle ramme sir Tristram naked in the forest with the swerd in his hand, and soo he cam to an hermytage, and there he leid hym doum and alepte, and in the meane whyle the heremyte stale aweye his swerd, and leid mete doune by hym. Thus was he kepte there a ten dayes. And at the last he departed and came to the herd men ageyne. And there was a gaunt in that countre that hyght Tawles. And for fere of sir Tristram more than seuen yere he durst neuer moche goo at large, but for the moost party he kepte hym in a sure castel of his owne, and soo this Tawless herd telle, that sir Tristram was dede by the noyse of the courte of kyng Marke. Thennne this Tawless went daily at large. And so he happened upon a day he came to the herd men wandryng and langerynge. And there he sette hym doune to reste among them. The meane while ther cam a knyght of Cornewaile that ledde a lady with hym, and his name was sir Dynaunt, & whanne the gyaunt sawe hym, he wente from the herd men and hydde hym vnder a tree, and soo the knyght came to that welle, and there he alghte to repose hym. And as soone as he was from his hors, this gyaunt Tauleas came betwixe this knyght and his hors, and toke the hors and lepte vpon hym. So forth with he rode vnto sir Dynaunt, and took hym by the coller, & pulled hym afores hym vpon his hors, and there wolde have straken of his hede. Thenne the herd men said vnto sire Tristram, helpe yonder knyght, helpe ye hym seid sir tristram. We dare not said the herd men. Thenne sir tristram was ware of the swerd of the knyght there as hit lay, and soo thyder he ranne, and took vp the swerd and stroke of sir tauleas hede, and so he yede his way to the herd men.

Thenne the knyght took vp the gyaunts hede, and bare hit with hym vnto kyngge Marke, and told hym, what adventure betyd hym in the forest, and how a naked man rescowed hym, from the grymly gyaunt Tauleas. Where hadde ye this adventure said kyngge Marke. forsothe said syr Dynaunt at the fayre fontayne in your foreste, where many adventurious knytes mete, and there is the madde man. Wel said kyng Mark I wille see that wild man. So within a day or two kyngge Marke commaunded his knyghtes, & his hunters that they shold by redy on the morn for to hunte, and soo vpon the morn he wente vnto that forest. And whanne the kyng came to that welle, he fonde there lyenge by that well a fayr naked man, and a swerd by hym. Thenne kyng Mark blewe and straked, and there with his knyghtes came to hym, and themme the kyng commaunded his knyghtes to take that naked man with fayrenes, and brynge hym to my castel. Soo they did sautfy & fayre and cast mantels vpon sir Tristram and soo ledde hym vnto Tyntagyll, and there they bathed hym and wasshed hym and gaf hym hote suppynge til they had brought hym wel to his remembrance, but alle this whyle there was no creature that knewe sir Tristram nor what man he was. Soo hit felle vpone a daye that the quene la beale Isoud herd of suche a man, that ranne naked in the foreste, and how the kyng had brought hym home to the Courte. Thenne la Beale Isoud called vnne to her dame Brangwayne and said come on with me. For we wille goo see this man that my lord brought from the forest the last daye. So they passed forthe, and spere where was the seke man. And thenne a squyer told the quene that he was in the gerdyn, taike his rest, and repose hym ageynst the sonne. Soo when the quene loked vpone sir Tristram she was not remembrede of hym, but euer she heid vnne to dame Brangwayne. me semeth I shold haue sene hym here to forre in many places, but as soone as sir Tristram sawe her, he knewe her wel ynough. And thenne he tornde awaye his vysage, and wepte. *Thenne the quene hadde alweyes a lytel brachet with her that sir Tristram gaf her the first tymne that euer she came in to Cornewalle, & never wold that brachet departe from her, but yf syre Tristram was nyge there as was la Beale Isoud, and this brachet was sente from the kynges daughter of Freunce vnto syre Tristram for grete loute, and anone as this lytel brachet felte a saucour of syr Tristram she lepte vpone hym and lyked his leerles and his eres, and thene she whyned and quested and she smelled at his feet and at his handes, and on all partes of his body that she myghte come to. A my lady sayd dame Brangwayn vnto la beale Isoud, Allas allass said she I see it is myn owne lord syr Tristram. And therupon Isoud felle doune in a swoone and soo layes a grete whyle. And when she myghte speke she said, my lord sir Tristram blessid be god ye haue your lyf, and now I am sure ye shall be discouered by this lytel brachet, for she wille neuer leue you. And also I am sure as soone as my lord kynges Mark doo knowe you, he wil bannyshe you oute of the countrey of Cornewalle, or els he will destoye you. For goddes sake myn owne lord, grauyte kynges Marke his wille, and thenne drawe you vnto the Courte of kyng arthur, for there are ye byloued, and euer when I myye I shalle sende vnto you. And when ye lyset ye may come to me, and at alle tymes erly and late I wil be at your commaundement, to lyue as poure a lyf as euer dyd. queene or lady. O madame said sir Tristram goo from me, for mykel anger and daunger haue I escaped for your loue.

Capitulum xxii.

Thenne the queene departed, but the brachet wold not from hym, and there with alle came kynge Marke and the brachet sat vpon hym, and bayed at them all. There with al syr Andræ spak and said syr this is sir Tristram I see by the brachet. Nay said the kyng I can not suppose that. Thenne the kynge asked hym vpon his faith what he was, and what was his name. So god me help said he, my name is sir Tristram de lyones, now do by me what ye lyst.
A saide kynge Mark me repenteth of your recouer, & thenne he lete velle his barons to juge sir Tristram to the dethe. théne many of his barons wold not asente therto, and in especyal syr Dynas the senechal, & syr Fergus. And so by thaduyse of them al sir Tristram was banyashed out of the coutry for x yere, & therupon he took his oth vpon a book before the kyng & his barons. And soo he was made to departhe oute of the Country of Cornewaile, and there were many barons brought hym vnto his shyp, of the whiche somme were his frendes, & somme his foes. And in the meane whyle there came a knyghte of kynge Arturs, his name was Dynadan, and his comyng was for to seke after sir Tristram, thenne they shewed hym where he was armed at alle poynte goynge to the shyp. Now fayre knynte said sir Dynadan or ye passe this courte that ye will juste with me, I requyre the. With a good wille said sir Tristram, & these lords wille gyue me leue. Thenne the Barons graunted therlo, and soo they ranne to gyders, and there sire Tristram gaif sire Dynadan a falle. And thenne he praised sir Tristram to gyue hym leue to goo in his felasship. ye shalle be ryght Welcome said thenne sire Tristram, and soo they took theyr horses and rode to their shaypes to gyders, and whanne sire Tristram was in the see, he said, Grete wel kynge Marke and all myn enemies, and saye hem I wille come agayne whan I maye. And wel am I rewarded for the fghtt-ynge with sire Marhaus, and delyuered all this countrye from seruage, and wel am I rewarded for the fetchyng and costes of Quene Isoud oute of Irland, and the danger that I was in fyrst & last and by the way comynge home what daunger I had to brynyge aseyne Quene Isoud from the castel Pluer, and well I am rewarded whanne I foughte with sir Bleoberys for syre Segwarydes wyt, and well am I rewarded when I fouzt with syre Blamore de ganys for kyng Anguyshe, fader vnto la Beale Isoude. And well am I rewarded when I smote doune the good knyghte syre Lamorak de galys at Kyng Markes request. And wel am I rewarded when I fought with the kyng with the honerd knyghtes, and the kyng of Northgalys, and bothe these wold haue put his land in seruage, and by me they were put to a rebuke. and wel am I rewarded for the aleyng of Tasleas the myghty gyaunte and many other dedes haue I done for hym, and now haue I my waryson. And telle Kyng Mark that many noble knyghtes of the table royd haue spared the barons of this countray for my sake. Also am I not wel rewarded when I fought with the good knyght sir Palomydes and rescowed quene Isoud from hym. And at that tym kyng Marke said abore all his barons I shold haue ben better rewarded. and forth with alle he took the see.

Capitulum xiii. (xxiii.)

And at the next landynge faste by the see, there mette with sir Tristram & with sir Dynadan sir Ector de marys and sir Boris de ganys, and there sir Ector Jysted with syr Dynadan, and he smote hym and his hors doun. And thenne sir Tristram wold haue Jysted with syre Boris and sir Boris said that he wolde not juste with no Cornysse knyghtes, for they are not called men of worship, and all this was done vpon a brydge. and with this came sire Bleoberys and syr Dryaunte, and sir Bleoberys proffered to Jyste with syr. Tristram, and there sir Tristram smote doune syr Bleoberys. Thenne said sire Boris de ganys, I wist nother Cornysse knyghte of soo grete valoure nor soo valyaunte as that knynte that bereth the trappors enbroudred with crownes. And thenne sir Tristram and syr Dynadan departed fro them in to a forest, and there mette them a damoysel that came for the loue of sire launcelot to seke after somme noble knyghtes of kyng Arthur's courte for to rescowe sire launcelot, and soo sire launcelott was ordeyned, for by the treason of quene Morgan le fay to haue slaye sire launcelot, and for that cause she ordeyned thyrty knyghtes to lye in a whyte for sire launcelot, and this damoysel knewe this treason. And for this cause the damoysel came for to seke noble knyghtes to helpe sry Launcelot. For that nyght or the day after sry launcelot shold come where these xxx knyghtes were. And soo this damoysel mette with syre Bors and sire Ector and with sire Dryaunt, and there she told hem alle four of the treason of Morgan le fay, and thenne they promysed her that they wold be ngythe where sire launcelot shold mete with the xxx knyghtes, & yf soo be they set vpon hym, we wil do rescowes as we can. so the damoysel departed, and by adventure the damoysel mett with sire tristram & with sire Dynadan, & there the damoysel told hem al the treason that was ordeyned for sire launcelot. Fair damoysel said sire tristram bryng me to that same place where they shold mete with sire launcelot. Thenne said sire Dynadan what will ye do, hit is not for vs to fyghte with thyrty knyghtes, and wete you wel I wylle not therof, as to matche one knyght two or thre is ynoogh and they be men. But for to matche xv knyghtes that wille I neuer undertak. fy for shame said sire Tristram, doo but youre parte. Nay said sire Dynadan I will not therof, but yf ye wil len me your sheld, for ye bere a sheld of Cornewaile, and for the cowardysse that is named to the knyghtes of Cornewaile by your sheldes ye be ever forborne. Nay said sry Tristram I will not departe from my sheld for her sake that gaf it me. But one thynge said sire Tristram I promyse the sry Dynadan, but yf thou wilt promyse me to abyde with me, here I shalle alee thee. For I desyre no more of the, but answere one knyghte. And yf thy herte wille not serue the, stande by and loke vpon me and them. Syre said syre Dynadan I promyse you to loke vpon & to doo what I may to saue my self, but I wold I had not mette with you. Soo thenne anowe these thyrty knyghtes cam fast by these four knyghtes, and they were ware of them, and eyther of other. And soo these thyrty knyghtes lete for thys cause that they wold not wrathe them ye cas be that they had ado with syr launcelot, and the four knyghtes let them passe to this entent that they wold see and beholde what they wold doo with syr launcelot. and soe the thyrty knyghtes paste on, and came by sir Tristram and by sir Dynadan, and themne sir Tristram cryed on hyghe, loo here is a knyght aseynte you for the loue of sire launcelot. and there he slawe two with one sperre and ten with his sword. And themne came in syr Dynadan and he dyed pasynge wel, and soo of the thyrty knyghtes there wente but ten awey, and they fledde. At this bataille sawe sir Bors de ganys and his thre felawes, and themne they sawe wel hit was the same knyghte that justed with hem at the brydge, themne they took their hores and rode vnto syr Tristram and prayed hym and thanked hym of his good dedes, and they alle desyre syr Tristram to goo wyth hem to their lodgyng, and he said nay, he wold not go to no lodgyng.
Themne they alle four knyghtes praid hym to telle hem his name.
Faire lordes said syr Tristram, as at this tyme I wille not telle you my name.

Capitulum xxiii.

Trwne sir Tristram & sir Dynadan rode forth theire wyte tyl they came to the shepheardes & to the herde men, & there they asked hem ye they knewe ony lodgyng or herberough there nyghe hand.
Forasote syrs sayde the herde men here by is good lodgyng in a castel. But there is suche a custome that there shalle no knyghte be herberowed but ye he Juste with two knyghtes, and ye he be but one knyghte, he must juste with two. And as ye be therin soonoe shalle ye be matched. There is shrewde herberowe seid syre Dyna-dan, lodge where ye will, for I wille not lodge there. Fy for shame sayd sir Tristram are ye not a knyghte of the table round, wherfore ye may not with your worship refuse your lodgyng. Not soo said the herd men, for and ye be beten, and haue the wers ye shalle not be lodged there, and ye ye bete them ye shalle be wel herberowed.
A said syr Dynadan they are two sure knyghtes. Themne sire Dynadan wold not lodge there in no manere, but as sire Tristram requyred hym of his knyghthode, and so they rode thyder. and to make shorte tale, syr Tristram and sir Dynadan smote hem doune bothe, and soo they entred in to the castel and had good chere, as they coude thynke or deuye. And whanne they were vnarmed and thought to be mery and in good rest, there came in at the yates syre Palomydes and syre Gaherys requyrynge to haue the custome of the castel. What artis this said sire Dynadan, I wolde haue my rest; that may not be said sir Tristram. Now must we nedes defende the custome of this castel, in soo moche as we haue the better of the lordes of this castel, and therfore saide sire Tristram, nedes muste ye make you redy. In the deyyle nam namede sire Dynadan came I in to your company, and so they made them redy. And sir Gaherys encountred with sire Tristram, and syr Gaherys had a falle, and sir Palomydes encountred with sire Dynadan, and sir Dynadan had a falle. thanne was hit fall for falle. Soo thanne muste they fyghte on foote. that wold not syr Dynadan, for he was so sore bryshed of the falle that syre Palomydes gaf hym. Thanne sir Tristram vnlaiced syre Dynadans helme, and praid hym to helpe hym. I wille not sayde syr Dynadan for I am sore wounded of the thrytty knyghtes that we hadde but late ago to doo with alle. But ye fare said sire Dynadan vnto syr Tristram as a madde man and as a man y' is oute of his mynde y' wold cast hym selfe away, and I may curse the tyme that euer I sawe you. For in al the world are not two suche knyghtes that ben so wode as is sire launcelot and ye syr Tristram, for ones I felle in the felsaup of syr launcelot as I haue done now with you and he set me a werke that a quarter of a yere I kepte my bedde. Jhesu defende me said syr Dynadan from suche two knyghtes, and specially from your felsaup. Thenne said syre Tristram I will fyghte with hem both. Thenne syr Tristram badde hem come forth both, for I wille fyght with you, thenne syr Palomydes and syr Gaherys dressid them, and smote at hem bothe. thenne Dynadan smote at syr Gaherys a stroke or two, and tornde from hym. nay said sir Palomydes, it is to moche shame for vs two knyghtes to fyghte with one. And thenne he dyd byd syr Gaherys stande asyde with that knyght that hath no lyste to fyghte. Thenne they rode to gyders and fought longe, and atte last syr Tristram doubled his strokes, and drofe syre Palomydes a bak, more than thre strydes. And thenne by one assente syre Gaherys and syr Dynadan wente betwixete them, and departed them in sonder. And thenne by assent of syr Tristram they wold haue lodged to gydres. But syre Dynadan wold not lodge in that castel, And thenne he cursed the tyme that euer he came in their felauship, and soo he took his hors, and his harneis, and departed.

Thenne sir Tristram prayd the lordes of that castel to lene hym a man to breyne hym to a lodgynge, and soo they dyd, and ouertoke sir Dynadan, and rode to their lodgyng two myle thens with a good man in a pryory, and there they were wel at ease. And that same nyght sir Bors and sire Bleoberys and sir Ector and syre Dryaunt abode style in the same place there as sire Trystram fousht with the thyrty knyghtes, and there they mette with syr Launecloot the same nyght, and had made promyse to lodge with syr Colgreusunche the same nyght.

But anone as the noble Knyghte syre launcelot herd of the shilde of Cornewayle themne wyste he wyl that hyt was sire Tristram that fought with his enemies. And thenne syre Launcelot prayes syre Tristram, and called hym the man of moost worship in the world. Soo there was a knyght in that pryory that hyght Pellinore, and he desyreth to wete the name of sire Tristram, but in no wyse he coude not, and so syr Tristram departed and lefte sir Dynadan in the pryory; for he was soo wery and soo sore brysed that he myghte not ryde. Thenne this knyght syre Pellinore said to sire Dynadan, sythen that ye wille not telle me that knyghtes name I will ryde after hym, and make hym to telle me his name, or he shall dye therfore. Beware sir knyght said sir Dynadan, for and ye folowe hym, ye shalle repente hit. Soo that knyghte syre Pellinore rode after sire Tristram and rekyred hym of Justes, thene sir Tristram smote hym doune and wounded hym thuruz the sholder, and soo he past on his way. And on the next day folowyng syr Tristram mette with pursyuaites, and they told hym that there was made a grete crye of turnement bitwene kynge Carados of scotland and the kynge of Northwalys, & eyther shold Juste aseyne other at the castel of maydens, and these purvynusites sought alle the coustrey after the good knyxtes, and in especial kynge Carados lete make sekynge for sir launcelot du lake, and the kynge of North galys lete seke after sir Trisram de lyons. And at that tyme syr Trisram thought to be at that justes, and soo by aduenture they mette with sire kay the seneschal and syr Sagramor le desyrys, and syr kay rekyred sir Trisram to Juste, and sire Trisram in a maner refused hym, by cause he wolde not be hurte nor bryedayd ageynste the grete Justes that shold be before the castel of maydens, and therfore he thought to repose hym and to reste hym. And alway sir kay croid sir knyxt of Cornewale just with me, or els yelede the to me as recreaunte. Whan sir Trisram herd hym says soo, he terned to hym, and thenne sire kay refused hym and turned his bak. Thenne syr Trisram said as I fynde the, I shalle take the. Thenne sire Kay torned with eyyll wylle, and syre Trisram smote syr kay doune, and soo he rode frothe. Thenne syre Sagramor le desyrys rode after syre Trisram, and maade hym to juste with hym, and there syre Trisram smote doune syre Sagramor le desyrys from his hors and rode his way, and the same day he mette with a damoyssel that told hym that he shold wynne grete worship of a knyxt aduenturous that dyd moche harms in alle that countrippy.

Whanne sir Trisram herd her say soo, he was gladded to goo with her to wynne worship. So sire Trisram rode with that damoyssel a vj myle, and thenne mette hym syre Gawayne, and there with alle syre Gawayne knewe the damoyssel, that she was a damoyssel of Quene Morgan le say. Thenne sir Gawayne vnderstode that she ladde that knyght to somme meschyeef. Faire knyght said sire Gawayne whyder ryde you now wyth that damoyssel. Syr said sire Trisram I wote not whyder I shalle ryde, but as the damoyssel wylle lede me. Syr saide syre Gawayne ye shalle not ryde with her, for she and her lady did never good but ylle. And thenne sir Gawayne pulled oute his swerd, and said, damoyssel, but yf thou telle me anon, for what cause thou ledest this knyxt with the thou shalt dye for hit ryght anone. I knowe alle your ladyes treason, & yours. Mercy syre Gawayne she said, and yf ye wille saue my lyf, I wille telle you.
Saye on said sir Gawayne, and thou shalt haue thy lyf. Syre she said Quene Morgan le fay my lady hath ordeyned a xxx ladyses to seke & aspye after sir launcelot or sir tristram, & by y' trainys of these ladyses who y' may first mete ony of these two knyghtes they shold torne hem vnto Morgan le fays castel, sayenge that they shold doo dedes of worship, & yf ony of tho two knyztes cam there, there be xxx knyghtes lyenge and watchyng in a toure to wayte vpon sir launcelot or vpon syre tristram. Fy for shame said sire Gawayne that ever suche fals treason shold be wrought or vaed in a quene and a kynges syster, and a kyng and quenes doughter.

Syr said sire Gawayne wille ye stonde with me, and we wille see the malyc of these thyrtyk knyghtes, syr said sir tristram goo ye to hem, and hit please you, and ye shal see I wille not sayle you, for hit is not long ago syn I and a felawe mette with thyrtyk knyztes of that quenes felaschip. And god sped vs soo that we may wynne worship. So thene sire Gawayne and sire tristm rode toward the castel where Morgan le fay was, and euer sire Gawayne demed wel that he was sire trisram de lyones by cause he herd that two knyghtes had slayne and beten thyrty knyghtes. And whanne they came afore the castel sir Gawayn spak on hyghe, and said Quene Morgan le fay sende oute youre knyghtes, that ye haue leyd in a watche for sir launcelot & for sir tristram. Now said sir Gawayne I knowe your fals treason, and thoruou all places where that I ryde men shall knowe of your fals treason, and now lette see sir Gawyn, whether ye dare come out of your castel ye thyrty knyghtes. Thenne the quene spak and al the thyrty knyghtes stiones, and said, sir Gawayne ful wel wetest thou what thou dost and saist. For by god we knowe the passynge wel. But alle that thou spekest, and dost, thow saist hit vpon pryde of that good Knyghte that is there with the. For there be somme of vs that knowen full wel the handes of that knyght ouer alle wel. And wete thou wel sir gawayne, hit is more for his sake than for thyn that we wylle not come oute of this castel. For wete ye wel sir Gawayne the Knyght that bereth the armes of Cornewaiyle, we knowe hym, and what he is. thenne sir Gawayne and sir tristram departed and rode on their wayes a day or two to gyders, and there by aduenture they met with syr Kay and syr Sagamor le desyrus. And thenne they were glad of syr gawayne, and he of them, but they wiste not what he was with the shelde of Cornewaiyle, but by demynge. And thus they rode to gyders a daye or two. And thenne they were ware of syr Breuse sauce pyte chacynge a lady for to haue slayne her, for he had alayn her peramour afoire. Hold you all style said syr Gawayne & shewe none of you forthe, and ye shalle see me reward yonder fals Knyght, for and he aspye you he is so wel horsed that he wille escape awey. And thenne syre Gawayne rode betwix syr Breus and the lady, and said fals knyghte leue her, and haue adoo with me. Whan syr Breuse sawe no moo but syre gawayne he feutryd his spere, and syr Gawayne ageynst hym, and there syr Breuse ouerthrew syr Gawayne, and thenne he rode ouer hym, & ouerthwart hym twenty tymes to haue destroyed hym, and whan sire Tristram sawe hym doo soo vylaynos a dede, he hurled oute ageynste hym. And whan syr Breuse sawe hym with the shelde of Cornewaiyle, he knewe hym well, that it was syre Tristram, and thenne he fledde, and sir Tristram folowed after hym, and syr Breuse saunce pyte was so horsed that he wente his waye quyte, and sir Tristram folowed hym longe, for he wold fayne haue ben auengyd vpon hym. And soo whanne he hadde longe chaeced hym, he sawe a fayre welle, and thyder he rode to repose hym, and tayed his hors til a tree.

Capitulum xxviii.

And thenne he pulle of his helme and wasshed his vysage, and his handes, and soo he felle on slepe. In the meane whyle came a damoyseil that had sought sir tristram many wayes and dayes within this land. And whanne she came to the welle she loked vpon hym, & had forgotten hym as in remembrance of sire Tristram, but by hys hors she knewe hym, that hyghte passe Brewel, that had ben sire Tristrams hors many yeres. For whanne he was mad in the forest, syr Fergus kepte hym. Soo this lady dame Brangwayne abode styele yl he was awake. Soo whanne she sawe hym wake, she salwed hym, and he her ageyn, for eyther knewe other of olde acqueyntaunce, themme she told hym how she had sought hym longe and brode, and there she told hym hou she hadde letters from quene la beale Isoud.
Themme anon sire Tristram redde them, and wete ye well, he was gladde, for thervyn was many a pyteous complaynte. Themme sire Tristram said, lady Brangwayne ye shalle ryde with me yyl that turnement be done at the castel of maydens. And thenne shalle yebere letters and tydnyges with you. And thenne sire tristram took his hors and sought lodgynge, and there he mette wyth a good amcyent knyght and prayd hym to lodge with hym. Ryzt so came Gouernaile vnto sir Tristram, that was glad of that lady. Soo this old knyghtes name was sir Pellownus, and he told of the grete turnement that shold be att the Castel of maydens. And there sir launcelot and xxxii knyxtes of his blood had ordeyned sheldes of Cornewaile, and ryzte soo there came one vnto syr Pellounes, and told hym that sir Persydes de bloyse was come home, thenne that knyght helde vp his handes and thanked god of his comynge home, and there sir Pellounes told syr Tristram that in two yeres he had not sene his sone syr Persydes. Syr said sir Tristram I knowe your sone wel ynough for a good knyght, soo on a tyme syr Tristram and syrPersydes came to their lodgynge both at ones, and soo they vnarmed hem, and putt ypon hem their clothynge. And thenne these two knyghtes eche welcomed other. And whanne syr Persydes vnnderstode that sir Tristram was of Cornewaile, he said he was ones in Cornewaile, and there I justed afor kynge Marke. And soo it happe me at that tyme, to ouerthrowe ten knyghtes, and thenne came to me syre Tristram de lyones and ouerthrew me, and took my lady awfy from me, and that shalle I neuer forgete, but I shalle remembre me and ever I see my tyme. A said sir trystram now I vnnderstande that ye hate syr Tristram. What deme ye, wene ye that sir Tristram is not able to withstande your malyce, yes said sir Persydes I knowe wel that sir Tristram is a noble knyght and a moche better knyght than I, yet shalle I not owe hym my good will. Ryght as they stode thus talkynge at a bay wyndowe of that castel, they sawe many knyghtes rydyng to and fro toward the turnement. And thanne was sire Tristram ware of a lykely knyght rydyng vpon a grete black hors, and a black couerd shelde. What knyfte is that said sire Tristram with the black hors & the blak sheld he semeth a good knyft. I knowe hym wel said sir Persydes he is one of the best knyghtes of the world, thenne is it syr Launcrupt said sir Tristram, as ye said syr Persydes, hit is syr Palomydes, that is yet vncrysted.

Capitulum xvi.

Thenne they sawe moche peopla of the countrey salwe sire Palomydes. And within a whyle after, ther cam a squyer of the castel, that told syr Pelloones that was lord of that castel, that a knyght with a blak sheld had Smyten doune thryten knyftes. Fayr broder said sir Tristram vnto syr Persydes, letvs caste vpon vs clokes, and letvs goe se the play. Not soo said syr Persydes, we wille not goo lyke knyftes thysder, but we wille ryde lyke men and goe knyghtes to withstande oure enemies. Soo they armed them and took their horses and grete spere, and thysder they went there as many knyftes essayed hem self before the turnement. And anone sir Palomydes sawe syr Persydes, and thenne he sente a squyer vnto hym and said, goo thow to the yonder knyght with the grene sheld and therin a lyon of gooldis, and say hym I requyre hym to juste with me, and tale hym that my name is sire Palomydes. Whanne sir Persydes understood that request of syr Palomydes, he made hym reddy, and there anone they mette to gyders, but syr Persydes had a falle.

Thenne sire Tristram dressid hym to be reungyld vpon sir palomydes, and that sawe syre Palomydes that was reddy, and soo was not sire Tristram and took hym at ausantage, and anote hym over his hose touyle whenne he had no spere in his reyste. Thenne starte vp syre Tristram and took his hors lyztaly, and was wrothe oute of mesure, and sore ashamed of that falle. Thenne sire Tristram sente vnto syr Palomydes by Gouernaile and prayd hym to juste with hym at his request. Nay said sire Palomydes as att this tyme I wille not juste with that knyght, for I knowe hym better than he weneth. And yf he be wrothe, he may ryghte it to morne at the castel of maydens, where he maye see me and many other knyghtes. With that came syr Dynadan, and whanne he sawe sire Tristre wrothe, he lyest not to jape, lo sayd sire Dynadan, here may a ma preue. Be a man neuer soo good yet maye he haue a falle, & he was neuer soo wyse but he myght be ouersene, and he rydeth wel that neuer fyle. Soo syre Tristram was pasynge wrothe and sayd to syre Perseysdes and to syre Dynadan I wille reuenge me. Ryghte soo as they stood talkynge there, there came by sir Tristram a lykely knyght rydying pasynge soberly and heystyly with a blak sheld. What knyght is that said sire Tristram vnto syr Perseysdes. I knowe hym well said sir Perseysdes, for his name is sire Bryaunt of Northwalys, soo he past on amonge other knyghtes of Northwalys. And there came in syre launcelot du lake with a sheld of the armes of Cornewalle, and he sente a squyer vnto syr Bryaunt, and requyred hym to juste with hym. Wel said syr Bryaunt, sythen I am requyred to juste, I wille doo what I may, and there syre launcelot smote doune syr Bryaunt from his hors a grete falle. And thenne syr Tristram mereuiled what knyght he was that bare the sheld of Cornewail. What so euere he be said syr Dynadan I warante you he is of Kynges Bannys blood, the whiche ben knyghtes of the most noble prowesse in the world, for to accompte soo many for soo many. Thenne there came two knyntes of Northgaules, that one byghte Hewe de la montayne, and the other syr Madok de la montayne, & they chalesyd sire launcelot foote hote. Syr Launcelet not refasing hem but made hym redy, with one spere he smote hem doune bothe ouer theiers hess croupes, and soo sir launcelot rode his way. By the good lord said sire Tristram he is a good knyght that bereth the shelds of Cornewail, and me semeth he rydeth in the best maner that euere I sawe knyghte ryde. Thenne the kyng of Northgalys rode vnto syre Palomydes, and praid hym hertely for his take to juste with that knyght that hath done vs of Northgalys de-spyte. Syr said sir Palomydes I am ful lothe to haue adoo with that knyght, and cause why is, for as to morne the grete turnement shalle be. And therfor I wille kepe my self freshe by my wille. Nay said the kyng of Northgalys I pray you requyre hym of justes, syre sayd syr palomydes I wille juste at your request, and requyre that knyght to juste with me, and often I have sen a man haue a falle at his owne request.

Thenne sir palomydes sente vnto sir launcelot a squier and requyred hym of justes. Fair felawe said sir launcelot, telle me thy lordes name. Syre said the squier my lorde name is syr Palomydes the good knyght. In good houre said sir launcelot, for there is no knyght that I sawe thys seuen yeres that I had leuer adoo with all than with hym. And so eyther knyghtes made hem redy with two grete speres. Nay said syr Dynadan ye shalle see that sir Palomydes will quyte hym ryght wel. hit may be soo said sir Tristram, but I vndertake that knyght with the sheld of Cornewylye shal gyue hym a falle. I bileue hit not said sir Dynadan. Ryght so they spered their horses, and feutryd their speres, and eyther hytte other, and syr palomydes brake a spere vpon sere launcelot, and he sat and meued not, but sir Launcelot smote hym so lyghtly that he made his hors to auoyde the sadel, and the stroke brake his shekde and the hauberke, and had he not fallen, he had be slayne. how now said sir Tristram, I wiste wel by the maner of their rydyng bothe that sire Palomydes abold haue a falle. Ryght so sir launcelot rode his way and rode to a well to drynke and to repose hym, and they of Northgalyes aspyed hym whyther he rode, and thenne there followed hym twelue knyghtes for to haue meschyeued hym, for this cause that vpon the morn at the turnement of the castel of maydens that he abold not wynne the vycotry. Soo they came vpon sir launcelot sodenly and vnethe he myght putte vpon hym his helme, and take his hors but they were in handes with hym, & thenne sir launcelot gat his spere and rode thorou them, and there he slewe a knyght and brake his spere in his body. Thenne he drewe his swerd and smote vpon the ryght hand and vpon the lyfte hand soo that within a fewe strokes he had slayne other thre knyghtes, and the remenaunt that abode he wounded hem sore alle that dyd abyde. Thus syr launcelot escaped from his enemies of Northwalys, and thenne sir launcelot rode his way tyl a frende & lodged hym tyl on the morne, for he wold not the fyrste daye haue adoo in the turnement by cause of his grete labour. And on the fyrst day he was with kyng Arthur there as he was set on hyhe vpon a schaffold to discerne who was best worthy of his dedes. So sir launcelot was with kyng Arthur, and justed not the fyrst daye.

Capitulum xxx.

Now torne we vnto sir Tristram de lyones that commaunded Gouernaile his seruaunt to ordeyne hym a blak sheld with none other remebraunce therin. And soo syre Persydes and syr Tristram departed from their hooste syr Pellounes, and they rode erly toward the turnement, and thenne they drewe hem to kyng Carados syde of Scotland, and anone knyxtes beganne the felde what of kyng Northgalys party, and what of kyng Carados party, & there began grete party. Thenne there was hurlyng and rasshynge. Ryght soo came in syr Persydes and sire Tristram, and soo they dyd fare that they put the kyng of Northgalys abak. Thenne came in syre Bleoberys de ganys and syre Gaherys with them of Northgalys, and thenne was sir Persydes smyten doune, and alle moost slayne. For moo than xl horsmen wente ouer hym. For syr Bleoberys dyd grete dedes of armes and syre Gaherys sayled hym not. Whanne sire Tristram byheld them, and sawe hem doo suche dedes of armes, he merueylld what they were. Also sir Tristram thought shame that sir Persydes was soo done to, and thenne he gat a grete spere in his hand, and thenne he rode to sire Gaberys and smote hym doune from his hora. And thenne was sire Bleoberys wroth and gate a spere and rode ageynst sire Tristram in grete yre, & there syre Tristram mette with hym, and smote sire Bleoberys from his hora. Soo thenne the kynge with the honderd knyghtes was wrothe, and he horsed sire Bleoberys and sir gaberys ageyne, and there beganne a grete medle, and euer sire tristram held them passynge shorte, and euer sire Bleoberys was passynge besy vpon syre Trystram, and there came sir Dynadas ageynst syre Tristram, and sire Tristram gaf hym suche a buffet that he swounded in his sadel. Thenne asone sir Dynadan cam to sire Tristram, and said syr I knowe the better than thy weneest. But here I promyse the my trouthe I wille neuer come ayenest the more, for I promyse the that swerd of thy shall neuer come on myn helme. With that came sir Bleoberys, and syr Tristram gaf hym suche a buffet that doune he leyd his heede, and thenne he sought hym so sore by the helme, that he pulled hym vnder his hens feet. And thenne kyng Arthur blewe to lodgyng. Thenne syr Tristram departed to his pamelion, and sire Dynadan rode with hym, and sire Persydys & kyng Arthur thenne and the kynges vpon bothe partyes merueylled what knyght that was with the blak shekle. Many said their adnyne, and some knewe hym for syre Tristram, and helde their pess and wold nought say. Soo that fyrist day kyng Arthur and alle the kynges and lordes that were juges gaf sir Tristram the pynye, hou he hit they knewe hym not but named hym the knyght with the blak shele.

Capitulum xxxi.

Thenne vpon the monye sire Palomydes retorned from the kyng of Northgalys, and rode to kyng Arthurs syde where was kyng Cassados and the kyng of Erland, & syr launcelot kyne and sir Gesewayns kyne. Soo sire palomydes sente the damoysele vnto sire Tristram that he sente to seke hym whanne he was oute of his mynde in the forest, and thy damoysele asked sire Tristram, what he was, and what was his name. As for that said sir Tristram telle sir Palomydes ye shalle not wete as at this tyme vnto the tyme I hane broken two spares vpon hym. But lote hym wete thus moche said sir Tristram, that I am the same knyghte that he smote doune in ouer esenyng at the turnement & telle hym playnly, on what party that syre Palomydes be, I wille be of the contrary parte. Syre said the damoysele ye shalle vnderstande that sir Palomydes wille be on kyng Arthurs syde, where the moost noble knyghtes of the world ben. In the name of God said sir Tristram, thennne wille I be with the kyng of Northgalys by cause syr Palomydes wille be on kyng Arthurs syde, and els I wold not but for his sake. Soo whanne kyngye Arthur was come they bleweto the seide, and themhe there began a grete party, and soo kyngye Carados justed with the kyngye of the bonerd knyghtes, and there kyngye Carados hadde a falle, themhe was there hurlynge and rasshyngye, and ryght so cam in-knyghtes of kyngye Arthur, and they bare on bak the kyngye of Northgalys knyghtes. Thenne sire Tristram came in and beganne so roughly and soo bygly that there was none myght withstande hym, and thus sire Tristram dured longe. And at the last syr Tristram felle amonche the felauship of kyngye Ban, and there felle vpon hym syr Bors de ganys, and syr Ector de marys, and sire Blanor de ganys, & many other knyghtes. And themhe sire Tristram smote on the ryght hand and on the lyfte hand that alle lordes and ladyes spak of his noble deedes. But at the last syre Tristram shold have had the verse, had not the kyngye with the bonerd knyghtes ben. And themhe he came with his felauship and rescowed sire Tristram, and brought hym away from tho knyghtes that bare the sheldes of Cornwale, and thenhe sire Tristram sawe another felauship by them self, and there were a xl Knyghtes to gyder, and sir Kay the Seneschal was there gouernour. Themhe sire Tristram rode in amongest them, and there he smote doune syr Kay from his hors, and there he fared among tho Knyghtes lyke a grey hound among conyes. Themhe syre launcelot fond a Knyght that was sore wounded vpon the hede. Sir said sire launcelot who wounded you so sore. Sire he said a Knyght that bereth a black sheld, and I maye curse the tymne that euer I mette with hym for he is a deuyl and no man. Soo sire launcelot departed fro hym, & thought to mete with sir Tristram, and soo he rode with his swerd drawn in his hand to seke sir Tristram, and thenne he appyed hym bow he hurled here and there, and at every stroke syr Tristram wel nygh smote doune a knyght. O mercy Jhesu said the kyngye syth the tymne I bare armes sawe I neuer no knyght do so merueilous dedes of armes. And yf I shold sette vpon this knyght said sir Launcelot to hym self I dyd shame to my self, & there with al sir launcelot put vp his swerd. And thene the Kynyng with the C Knyztes, and an bonerd more of Northwalys set vpon the twenty of sir launcelots kyn, and they xx Knyztes held them euer to gyder, as wylde swyne and none wold saile other, & so whan sir Tristram beheld the noblesse of these xx knyghtes, he meruciled of their good dedes, for he sawe by their faire and by their reule that they had leuer deye than auoyde the feld.

Now Ihesu saide syre Tristram wel maye he be valyaunte and ful of provesse that hath suche a sorte of noble Knyghtes vnto his kynne, and ful lyke is he to be a noble man that is their leder and gouernour, he menthe hit by syre Launcelot du Lake. Soo whanne syre Tristram had beholden them long, he thouzt shame to see .ii.C knyestes batteryn g vpon twenty knyghtes. Thenne sire Tristram rode vnto the kynge with the honerd knyghtes, and said syre leue youre fyghtynge with tho twenty knyghtes, for ye wynne no worship of them, ye be soo many, and they soo fewe.

And wete ye wel they wille not oute of the feld I see by their chere and countenaunce, and worship gete ye none and ye alee them, therfore leue your fyghtynge with them, for I to encrease my worship, I wyll ryde to the twenty knyghtes and helpe them with all my myghte and power. Nay said the kynge with the honerd knyghtes, ye shall not do so. Now I see youre courage and curtey, I wille withdrawe my knyestes for your pleasyr, for euermore a good knyght wylle faoure another, and lyke wille drawe to lyke.

Capitulum xxxii.

Thenne the kynge with the honerd knyghtes withdrew his knyghtes. And al this whyle and long tofore syr launcelot had watched vpon syr Tristram with a very purpoe to haue felaushedipped with hym. And thenne sodeny syr Tristram, syr Dynadan, and Gouernaille his man rode their waye in to the forest that no man perceived where they wente. Soo thenne kynge Arthur blewe vnto lodgynge, and gaf the kynge of Northgalys the pryece by cause syr Tristram was vpon his syde. Thenne syr launcelot rod here and there so wood as Lyon that faulted his fylle by cause he had loste syre Tristram, and soo he retorned vnto kynge Arthur, and thenne in alle the feld was a noyse that with the wynde hit myght be herd two myle thens, how the lorde and ladyses cryed the knyght with the blak sheldhe hath wonne the feld.

Allas said kynge Arthur where is that knyght become, hit is shame to alle tho in the feld so to lete hym escape awey from you, but with gentylnes and cortesye ye myght haue brought hym vnto me to the castel of maydens. Thanne the noble kynge Arthur wente vnto his knyghtes and comforted them in the best wyse that he coude, and sayd, my fayre felawes be not dysayned, how be hit ye haue loste the feldis this daye and many were hurte and sore wounded, and many were hole. My felawes said kynge Arthur loke that ye be of good chere, for to morne I wille be in the feld with you and reuenge you of youre enemies.

Soo that nyght Kyng Arthur and his knyghtes repose them self. The damosel that came from la Beale Isoud vnto syr Trisfram alle the whyle the turnement was adoynge she was with Queue Gueneuer, and euer the Queene asked her for what cause she came in to that Countrey. Madame she ansuerd I come for none other cause but from my lady la Beale Isoud to wete of your welfare. For in no wyse she wold not telle the Queene that she came for syr Tristrams sake. Soo this lady dame Brangwayne took her leue of Queue Gueneuer, and she rode after syr Tristram. And as she rode thurgh the forest she herd a grete crye, thenne she commaunded her quyver to goo in to that forest to wete what was that noyse, and soo he came to a welle and there he fond a Knyght bounden tyl a tree cryeng as he had ben wode and his hors and his harneis standynge by hym. And whan he aspyed the quyver, ther with he abrade, and brake hym self loos and took his sword in his hand, and ranne to haue alayne that quyver. Thanne he took his hors and fledde all that euer he myght vnto dame Brangwayne, and told her of his adventyre. Thenne she rode vnto syr Tristram pauelione, and told sire Tris-tram what adventyre she had fonde in the forest. Allas said syr Tristram vpon my heedle there is somme good Knyghte at meschyef. Thenne sire Tristram tooke his hors and his swerd, and rode thyder, there he herd how the Knyghte complayned vnto hym self and sayd, I woful knyght syre palomydes what mysaunturbe befalleth me, that thus am defoiled with falsedes and treason thorou syre Bors and syre

vol. i. 3 a
Ector. Alas he sayde why lyue I soo longe. And thenne he get his swerd in his handes, and maade many straunge sygnes and tokens, and soo thorou his ragynge he threw his swerd in to that fontayne. Thenne sir Palomydes wayled and wrange his handes. And at the laste for pure sorow he ranne in to that Fontayne ouer his bely, and soughte after his swerd. Thenne sir Tristram sawe that and ranne vpon syr Palomydes, and helde hym in his armes fast. What arte thou said Palomydes that holdeth me soo. I am a man of this forest that wold the none harme. Alas said sire Palomydes I maye neuer wynne worship where syr Tristram is. For euer where he is, and I be there thenne gete I no worship. And yf he be aweye, for the moist party I haue the gree, onles that sire Launcelot be there or syr Lamorak. Thenne sire Palomydes said ones in Irland syr Tristram putte me to the worse, and another tyme in Cornewaile and in other places in this land. What wold ye do said syre Tristram & ye had sir Tristram. I wold fyghte with hym said sir Palomydes and ease my berty vpon hym, and yet to saye the sothe syre Tristram is the gentelyst knyght in this world lyuyng. What wil ye doo sayd sir Tristram wille ye goo with me to youre lodgyng. Nay sayde he I wille goo to the knyng with the houderd knyghtes, for he rescowed me from sire Bors de ganys, and sir Ector, & els had I ben slayne traitourly. Syre Tristram said hym suche kynde wordes that syre Palomydes wente with hym to his lodgyng. Thenne Gouernaile wente to foyre, and charged dame Brangwayn to goo outhe of the way to her lodgyng, and byd ye syre Persydes that he make hym no quares. And so they rode to gyders tyl they came to sire Tristrams pauliome, and there syre Palomydes had alle the chere that myght be had all that nyghte. But in no wyse sire Palomydes myst not knowe what was syr Tristram, and soo after souer they yede to reste. And syr Tristram for grete trouaille alepte tylle it was dayne. And syr Palomydes myghte not slepe for anguyse, and in the daunynge of the dayne he tooke his hors pryuely, and rode his waye vnto syr Gaberys and vnto syr Sagramour le desyrus, where they were in their pauliome, for they thre were felawes at the begynynge of the turnement. And thenne vpon the morne the knyng blewe vnto the turnement vpon the thyrdde daye.
Soo the kyng of Northgalys and the kyng with the honderd knyghtes they two encountred with kyng Carados and with the kyng of Irelond, and there the kyng with the honderd knyghtes smote doune kyng Carados, and the kyng of Northgalys smote doune the kyng of Irelond. With that came in syr Palomydes, and whan he cam he made grete werke, for by his endented sheldhe he was well knowen. Soo came in kyng Arthur, and dyd grete dedes of armes to gyders, and putte the kyng of Northgalys and the kyng with the honderd knyghtes to the werse. With this came in syr Tristram with his black sheldhe. And anone he justed with syre palomydes, and there by fyne force syr Tristram smote syre palomydes ouer his hors croupe. Thenne kyng Arthur cryed Knyght with the black sheldhe make the redy to me, and in the same wye sir Tristram smote kyng Arthur. And thenne by force of kyng Arthurs knyghtes the kynges and sir palomydes were horsed agayne. Thenne kyng Arthur with a grete egre herte he gate a spere in his hand, and therupon the one syde he smote syr Tristram ouer his hors. Thenne foote hote syr Palomydes cam vpon sir Tristram as he was vpon foot to haue ouer ryden hym. Thenne sir Tristram was ware of hym, & there he stouped a syde, and with grete yre he gate hym by the arme, and pulled hym doune from his hors. Thenne syre palomydes lyghtely arose, and thenne they dashed to gyder myghtely with their swerdes, and many kynges, Quenes and lorde stode and beheld them. And at the laste syre Tristram smote syre palomydes vpon the helme thre mysty strokes, and at every stroke that he gaf hym he said hauve this for syre Tristrams sake. With that syre Palomydes felle to the erthe groudlynge. Thenne came the kynges with the honderd knyghtes, & broughte syre Tristram an hors, and soo was he horsed agayn. By thenne was syr Palomydes horsed, and with grete yre he justed vpon syr Tristram with his spere as hit was in the reyste and gaf hym a grete dasshe with his sword. Thenne sir Tristram auoyded his spere, and gate hym by the neck with his bothe handes, and pulled hym clene oute of his sadel, and soo he bare hym afofe hym the lengthe of ten spere, & thenne in the presence of hem al he lete hym fallé at his adventure. Thenne sire Tristram was ware of kynge Arthur, with a naked suerd in his hand, and with his spere sir Tristram ranne vpon kynge Arthur, and thenne kynge Arthur boldely abode hym and with his swerd he smote atwo his spere, and there with alle syre Tristram stonyed, and soo kynge Arthur gaf hym thre or four grete strokes or he myst gete out his swerd, and at the last sir Tristram drewe his swerd and assailed other passyng hard. With that the grete prees departed, themne sir Tristram rode here and there and dyd his grete payne that xi of the good knyghtes of the blood of kynge Ban that was of sire launcelots kyn, that daye syre Tristram smote doune, that alle the estates merueilled of his grete dedes and alle cryed vpon the knyght with the black sheld.

Thenne this crye was soo large, that sir launcelot herd it. And thenne he gat a grete spere in his hand, and came towards the crye. Thenne sir launcelot cryed, the knyght with the blak sheld make the redy to juste with me. Whanne sire Tristram herd hym say so he gat his spere in his hand, and eyther abeyshed dowm their hedes, and came to gyder as thonder, and sire Tristrams spere brake in pyeces, and syr launcelot by male fortune stroke sir Tristram on the syde a depe wound nyghe to the dethe. But yet syr Tristram mouvered not his sadel, and soo the spere brak, there with all sir tristram that was wounded gate oute his swerd, and he rasshed to sir launcelot, and gaf hym thre grete strokes vpon the helme that the fyre spranghe there oute, and sir launcelot abeyshed his hede lowely toward his sadel bowe. And there with alle sir tristram departed from the felde, for he felte hym soo woude that he wende he shold haue dyed, and sir Dynadan aspyed hym and folowed hym in to the forest. Thenne sir launcelot abode & dyd many merueyllous dedes. Soo whan sire Tristram was departed by the forests syde, he alght & vnlaide his harness and fresshed his woöd, thene wende sir Dynadan that he shold haue dyed. Nay nay saide sire Tristram, Dynadan, neuer drede the, for I am herte hole, & of this wounde I shal soone be hole by the mercy of god. By that sir Dynadan was ware where came palomydes rydynge streyghe vpoun them. And thenne syre Tristram was ware that syre Palomydes came to haue destroyed hym, and so syre Dynadan gaf hym warnyng and saide sire Tristram my lord ye are soo sore wounded that ye may not haue adoo with hym, thercfor I wille ryde ageyst hym and doo to hym what I maye. And yf I be slayne ye maye praye for my soule and in the meane while ye maye withdraue you and goo in to the castel, or in the forest that he shalle not mete with you. Syre Tristram smyled and said I thanke you syre Dynadan of your good wyll, but ye shalle wete that I am able to handle hym. And thenne anon hastely he armed hym and took his hors, and a grete spere in his hand and said to syre Dynadan Adieu, & rode toward syre Palamydes a softe pass.

Thenne whanne sire Palomydes sawe that, he made countenaunce to amende his hors, but he dyd hit for this cause. For he abode sire Gaherys that came after hym. And whanne he was come he rode toward syre Tristram. Thenne syre Tristram sente vnto syr palomydes and requyred hym to juste with hym. And yf he smote doune sir Palomydes, he wold doo no more to hym. And yf it so happend that sire Palomydes smote doune syr Tristram he badde hym do his vternaunce. So they were accorded, thenne they mette to gyders, and syre Tristram smote doune sir palomydes, that he had a greuous falle, soo that he laye stylle as he hadde ben dede. And thenne sire Trystram ranne vpon syr Gaherys, and he wold not haue justed. But whether he wolde or not syre Tristram smote hym ouer his hors croupe that he laye stylle as though he had ben dede. And thenne syr Tristram rode his waye and lefte syr Persydes squyer within the pauelions, and syre Tristram and syre Dynadan rode to an old knyghtes place to lodge them. And that olde knyght had fyue sones at the turnement, for whom he prayed god hertely for their comyng home. And so as the frenshe book saith they cam home al v. wel beten. And whan syr Tristram departed in to the forest syr laucelot held alwey the stoure lyke hard as a man araged that took no heede to hym self, and wete ye wel there was many a noble knyghte ageyst hym. And whanne kyng Arthur sawe sir Launcelot doo soo merueyllous dedes of armes, he thenne armed hym, & took his hors and his armour, and rode in to the felde to helpe syr launcelot, and soo many knyghtes came in with kyng Arthur, and to make short tale in conclusion the kyng of Northgalys, and the kyng of the honderd knyghtes were putte to the wers, and by cause syre launcelot abode and was the last in the felde, the pryece was yeuen hym. But sir Launcelot wold neyther for kyng, Quene ne knyghte haue the pryece, but where the crye was cryed thorugh the felde, syr launcelot syr launcelot hath wonne the felde this day, syre Launcelot lete make an other crye contrary, syr Tristram hath wonne the feld, for he beganne fyrst and last he hath endured, and soo hath he done the fyrst day, the second and the thyrde day.

Theynne alle the estates and degrees hyhe and lowe sayd of syr Launcelot grete worship, for the honour that he dyd vnto syr Tristram, and for that honour doyng to sir Tristram he was at that tyme more preyed and renoumed than and he had ouerthrown v C knyghtes, and all the peple holy for this gentynes, fyrst the estates bothe hyhe and lowe, and after the comyntale cryed at ones syre Launcelot hath wonne the felde who soo euer saye nay. Thenne was syre Launcelot wroth and ashamed, and soo there with alle he rode to kyng be Arthur. Allas said the kyng we are alle dysmysed that syr Tristram is thus departed from vs. By god said kyng Arthur he is one of the noblest knyntes that euer I sawe hold spere or sword in hand, and the moost curteyst knyght in his fyghtyng, for ful hard I sawe hym sayd kyng Arthur whanne he smote syr Palomides vpon the helme thryes, that he abasshed his helme with his strokes, and also he said, here is a stroke for syr Tristram, and thus thryes he sayd. Thenne kyng be Arthur, syr launcelot, and sire Dodynas le saucage took their horses to seke sir Tristram, and by the menes of syr Persydes, he had told kyng Arthur where syr Tristram was in his pavelione, but whanne they came there, syr Tristram and sir Dynadan were gone. thenne kynge Arthur and syr launcelot were heuy, and retorned agrayne to the castel of maydens makyng grete dole for the hurte of syre Tristram, & his sodeyne departynge. Soo god me helpe said kynge Arthur I am more heuy that I can not mete with hym, thenne for al the hurtes that alle my knyghtes haue had at the turnement. Ryght soo came sir Gaherys and told kynge Arthur how syr Tristram had smytene doune syr Palomydes, and it was atte syr Palomydes owne request. Allas said Kyng Arthur that was grete dishonoure to syre Palomydes in as moche as syre Tristram was sore wounded, and now may we alle kynges and knyxtes and men of worship saye that syre Tristram may be called a noble knyght and one of the best Knyghtes that euer I sawe the dayes of my lyf. For I wille that ye al kynges and Knyghtes knowe said Kynge Arthur that I never sawe Knyghte doo so merueylously as he hath done these thre dayes, for he was the first that began and that lengest held on sauf this last day. And though he was hurte it was a manly aduenture of two noble Knyghtes, and whan two noble men encuentre nedes must the one haue the worse lyke as god wil suffre at that tyme. As for me said sir launcelot for alle the landes that euer my fader lefte me I wold not haue hurte sir Tristram and I had knowne hym at that tyme, that I hurt hym was for I sawe not his shed. For and I had sene his black sheld, I wold not haue medled with hym for many causes, for late he dyd as moche for me as euer dyd Knyght and that is wel knowne that he had adoo with thyrtty Knyxtes, and no helpe saue syr Dynadan. And one thyngse shalle I promyse said syr launcelot, syr Palomydes shalle repente it as in his vnkyndely delynge for to folowe that noble knyght that I by myshap hurted thus. Syr launcelot sayd alle the worship that myght be said by sir Tristram. Thenne kynge Arthur made a grete feest to alle that wold come.

And thus we lete passe Kynge Arthur, and a lytel we wille tordne vnto syre Palomydes that after he had a falle of sire Tristram, he was nyghe hand araged oute of his wyt for despyte of sir Tristram. And soo he folowed hym by aduenture. And as he cam by a ryuer in his woodenes, he wold haue made his hors to haue lepte ouer, and the hors sayled footynge, and felle in the Ryuer, wherfore syre palomydes was adrad lest he shold haue ben drowned, and themne he auoyded his hors, and swamme to the land, and lette his hors goo doune by aduenture.

Capitulum xxxvi.

And whanne he came to the land he took of his harneis, and satte rorynge and cryenge as a man oute of his mynde. Ryght so came a damoysele euyn by syr Palomydes that was sente fro syr Gawayne and his broder vnto sir mordred that lay seke in the same place with that old knyght where syr Tristram was. For as the Frenshe book saith syr Persydes hurte soo syr Mordred a ten dayes afore, and had not ben for the loue of sir Gawayne and his broder, syr Persydes had slayne sir Mordred, and soo this damoysele came by sir palomydes, and she and he had langage to gyder, the whiche pleasyd neyther of them, and soo the damoysele rode her wayes tyl she came to the old knyghtes place, & there she told that old knyght how she mette with the woodest knyght by aduenture that euer she mette with all. What bare he in his sheld said sir Tristram, hit was endented with whyte and black saide the damoysele. A said sir Tristram that was sir palomydes, the good knyght. For wel I knowe hym said sir Tristram for one of the best knyghtes lyuynge in this realme. Thenne that old knyght took a lytyl hackney and rode for syre palomydes, and brought hym vnto his owne manoyr, and ful wel knewe sire Tristram syr Palomydes, but he said but lytel, for at that tyme syr Tristram was walkyng vpon his feete, and wel amended of his hurtes, and alweyes whan sire Palomydes sawe syr Tristram, he wold behold hym ful meruellously. And euer hym semed that he hadde sene hym. Thenne wold he saye vnto syre Dynadan and euer I may mete with syre Tristram he shal not escape myn handes. I merueile said sir Dynadan y' ye booste behynde syr Tristram, for it is but late that he was in youre handes, and ye in his handes, why wold ye not holde hym whanne ye hadde hym, for I sawe my self twyes or thryes that ye gat but lytel worship of sir Tristram, thenne was syr Palomydes ashamed. Soo leue we them a lytyl whyle in the old castel, with the old knyght sir Darras.

Now shall we speke of Kynge Arthur, that said to sir Launcelot had not ye ben, we had not lost syre Tristram, for he was here dayly vnto the tymes ye mette with hym, and in an euyle tymes sayd Arthur ye encountred with hym. My lord Arthur said Launcelot ye putte uppon me that I shold ben cause of his departycon, god knoweth hit was ageynste my wille. But whan men ben hote in dedes of armes ofte they hurte their frendes as wel as their foes. And my lord said sir launcelot ye shal vnderstande that sir Tristram is a man that I am loth to offende for he hath done for me more than euer I dyd for hym as yet. But themne sir launcelot made brynge forth a book and thene sir launcelot said, here we are ten Knyghtes that wil swere vpon a book neuer to reste one nyght where we rest another this twelue moneth vntil that we fynde syr Tristram. And as for me said syre Launcelot I promyse you vpon this book that and I may mete with hym, outhere with sayrnes or foulnesse I shalle brynge hym to this courte, or els I shalle dye therfore. And the names of these ten knyghtes that hadde vndertake this quest were these folowynges. Fyrst was sir Launcelot, syr Ector de Marya, syr Bors de ganys and Bleoberis and syre Blamor de ganys, and Lucan the botteler, syr Vwayne, syr Galyhud, Lyonel and Galyodyn. Soo these x noble knyghtes departed from the courte of kynge Arthur, and soo they rode vpon their quest to gyders vntil they came to a crosse where departed four wayes, and there departed the felaunship in four to seke syr Tristram. And as syr launcelot rode by aduenture he mette with dame Brangwayn that was sent in to that countrey to seke sir Tris- tram, and she fled as faste as her palfrey myght goo. Soo sire Launcelot mette with her and asked her why she fledde. A fayre knyghte said dame Brangwayne I flee for drede of my lyf, for here foloweth me syr Breuse saunce pyte to slee me. Hold you nygh me sayd sir launcelot. Thene whanne sire Launcelot sawe syr Breuse saunce pyte, syr launcelot cryed vnto hym, and said, fals knyght destroyer of ladys and damoysels, now thy last dayes be com. Whanne sire Breuse saunce pyte sawe sire launcelots shed he knewe hit wel, for at that tymes he bare not the armes of Cornewael, but he bene his owne sheldr. And thenne syre Breuse fled, and syr Tristram folowed after hym. But syr Breuse was soo wel horsed that whan hym lyst to flee he myght wel flee, and also abyde whan hym lyst.
And thenne sire launcelot retorned vnto dame Brangwayne and she thanked hym of his grete labour.

Capitulum xcviii.

Now wille we speke of sire Lucan the butteler that by fortune he came rydyng to the same place there as was syr Tristram, and in he came in none other entente, but to ake herberowe, thenne the porter asked what was his name. Telle your lord that my name is syr Lucan the botteler a knyghte of the round table. Soo the porter wente vnto syre Darras lord of the place, and told hym who was there to ake herboroue. Nay nay seid syr Darnale that was neuesew to syr Darras, saye hym that he shalle not be lodged here. But lette hym wete that I syr Darnale wyll mete with hym anon and byddye hym make hym redy. So sire Darnale came forth on horsbak, and there they mette to gyders with speres, and sir Lucan smote doune syr Darnale ouer his hors croupe, and thene he fledde in to that place, and sire Lucan rode after hym, & asked after hym many tymes.
Thenne syr dynadan said to sire Tristram hit is shame to see the lordes cosyn of this place defaile. Abye said sir Tristram and I shalle redresse it, and in the meane whyle syr Dynadan was on horsbak and he justed with Lucan y’ botteler, & ther sir lucan smote dynad’s thysck of the thygh, and soo he rode his way, and sire tristram was wrothe that sir Dynadan was hurte, & folowed after and thought to auenge hym, and within a whyle he ouertook sire lucan, and badde hym torne, and soo they mette to gyders soo that sire Tristram hurt sire Lucan passyng sore, and gaf hym a falle. With that came sire Vwayne a gentyl knyst. And whanne he sawe sire Lucan soo hurte, he called syre tristram to juste with hym. Faire knyghte said sire Tristram telle me your name I requyre you. Syre knyghte wete ye wel my name is syre Vwayne le fye de roy Vreyne. A saide sire Tristram by my wille I wold not hawe adoo with you at no tym, ye shalle not soo said sir Vwayne but ye shalle haue adoo with me. And thenne sire Tristram sawe none other boote but rode ageynst hym and ouerthrowe syr Vwyn and hurte hym in the syde, and soo he departed vnto his lodgynge ageyne. And whanne sire Dynadan vnderstood that syr Tristram had hurte sir Lucan, he wold haue ryden after syr Lucan for to haue slayne hym, but sir Tristram wold not suffre hym.

Thenne syr Vwayne lete ordeyne an hors lytter, and brought sir Lucan to the abbey of Ganys, and the castel there by hyght the castel of Ganys, of the whiche syr Bleoberys was lord. And at that Castel sire launcelot promysed alle his felawes to mete in the quest of syr Tristram. Soo whan sir tristram was come to his lodgyng, ther came a damoisel y' told sir Darras that thre of his sones were slayned at that turnement and two greuously wounded that they were neuer lyke to helpe them self. And alle this was done by a noble knyghte that bare the black sheld, and that was he that bare the pryece.

Thenne came there one and told syr Darras that the same knyght was within hym that bare the black sheld. Thenne sir Darras yede vnto sir Tristrams chamber, and there he fond his sheld and shewed it to the damoysel. A syr said the damoysel that same is he, that slewe your thre sones. Thenne withoute ony taryenge syr Darras putte syre Tristram and syre Palomydes and syr Dynadan within a strong pryson, and there sir Tristram was lyke to haue dyed of grete sekenesse, and every day syr Palomydes wold repreue sir Tristram of old hate betwixe them. And euere sir Tristram speke fayre and saide lytel. But whan sir Palomydes sawe the fallynge of sekenesse of sir Tristram thence was he heuy for hym, and comforted hym in alle the best wyse he coude. And as the Frenshe booke sith there came foutry knyghtes to sire Darras, that were of his owne kyn, and they wold haue slayne sire Tristam and his two felawes, but sire Darras wold not suffre that but kepte them in pryson, and mete and drynke they had. So sire Tristram endured there grete payne, for sekenesse had vndertake hym, and that is the grettest payne a prysoner maye haue. For alle the whyle a prysoner maye haue his helthe of body, he maye endure vnder the mercy of god and in hope of good deyneraunce. But whanne sekenes toucheth a prysoners body, thenne Capitulum xxxviii.

Now will we speke and lée Sir Tristram, syre Palomydes, & syr Dynadan in pryson, and speke we of other knyghtes that sookth after syre Tristram many dyuerse partie of this land, and some yede in to Cornewaile, and by aduenture syr Gaheryse neuwe vnto kyng Arthur came vnto Kyngge Mark, and there he was welreceyued, and satt at kyngge Marks owne table & eie of his owne messe. Thenne kyngge Mark asked sir Gaheryse what tedynges there were in the royalme of Logrya. Syre syd syr Gaheryse the Kyng regneth as a noble knyght, and now but late there was a grete Justes and tournement as euer I sawe oony in the realme of Logrya, and the most noble knyghtes were at that justes. But there was one knyght that dyd merueyllously thre dayes, and he bare a black shield, and of alle knyghtes that euer I sawe he preueed the best knyst. Thenne said Kyng Mark that was syre launcelot or syre palomydes the paynym. Not soo said syr Gaheryse, for both syre launcelot and sire Palomydes were on the contrary partie ageynst the Knyght with the blak skede, thenne was it sir Tristram said the kyng, ye said sir Gaheryse. And there with all the Kyng smote don his hede, & in hir herte he feryd sore that syre Tristram shold gete hym suche worchip in the Royame of Logrya, where thorou that he hym self shold not be able to withstande hym. Thus syre Gaheryse had grete chere with kyngge Marke, and with quene la Beale Isoud the whiche was gladde of syr Gaheryse worde. For wel she wist by his dedes and maners, that it was syr Tristram. And thenne the kyng made a feest Royal, and to that feest came sir Vwayne le fye de roy Vreyne, and somme callid hym Vwayne le blaucne maynys. And this syr Vwayn chalengyd alle the knyghtes of Cornewaile. Thenne was the kyng woode wroth that he had no knyghtes to ansuer hym. Thenne sire Andred neuewe vnto kyng Mark lepte vp and said I wille encountre with syr Vwayne. Thenne he yede and armed hym and horsed hym in the best maner. And there syre Vwayne mette with syre Andred and smote hym doune that he swounded on the erthe. Thenne was kyngge Marke sory and wrothe oute of mesure that he had no knyghte to reuenge his neuewe sir Andred. Soo the kyngge called vnto hym syr Dynas the seneschal, and praid hym for his sake to take vpon hym to juste with syr Vwayne. Syr said syr Dynas I am ful lothe to haue adoo with ony knyght of the round table, yet said the kyng for my loue take vpon the to juste. Soo syr Dynas made hym redy, and anone they encountred to gyders with grete spere, but sire Dynas was ouerthrown hors and man a grete falle, who was wrothe but kyngge Marke. Alas he said haue I no knyght that wille encountre with yonder knyghte. Syr said sir Gaheryse for your sake I wille Juste. So sir Gaherys made hym redy, and whanne he was armed he rode in to the falde. And whanne sir Vwayne sawe syr Gaheryse sheld he rode to hym and said, sir ye doo not youre parte. For sire the fyrst tymye ye were made Knyght of the round table ye sware that ye shold not haue ado with your felaushiop wetyngly. And par dy sir Gaheryse ye knewe me wel y nouz by my shield & so do I knowe you by your sheld, and thouz ye wold breke your othe, I wold not breke myn, for there is not one here nor ye that shal thinke I am aferd of yow, but I durst ryght wel haue adoo with you, and yet we be sister sones. Thenne was sir Gaheryse ashamed, and soo there with alle euery knyght wente their way, and sir Vwayne rode in to the countrye. Thenne kyng mark armed hym and tooke his hors and his spere with a squyer with hym. And thenne he rode afore sir Vwayne, and sodenly at a gap he ranne vpon hym as he that was not ware of hym, and there he smote hym al most thurgh the body, and there lefte hym. So within a whyle there cam sir Kay, and fonde sir Vwayne, and asked hym how he was hurte, I wote not said sir Vwayne why nor wherfore, but by treason I am sure I got this hurte, for here came a knyghte sodenly vpon me or that I was ware, and sodenly hurte me. Thenne there was come syre Andred to seke kyngge Marke. Thou traytour knyght said sir kay, and I wiste it were thou that thus traitourly hast hurte this noble knyghte, thow sholdest nouer passe my handes. Syre saide sir Andreid I dyd neuer hurt hym, and that I wyle reporte me to hym self. Fy on you fals knyghtes said syr kay, for ye of Cornewaile ar nought worthe. Soo syr kay make cary syr Vwayne to the abbay of the black Crosse, and there he was helyd. And thenne syr Gaherys took his leue of kynge Mark. But or he departed he sayd, syre kynge ye dyd a foule shame vnto you & your Courte whan ye bannysshed sir Tristram out of this coutrey, for ye neded not to hase doubted no knyght and he had ben here, and soo he departed.

Capitulum xxxix.

Thenne there came syre kay the Seneschel vnto kynge Marke, and there he hadde good chere showyng outeward. Now sayre lordes said he wille ye preue ony adventure in the forest of Morris in the whiche I knowe wel is as hard an adventure as I knowe ony. Syr said sir kay, I wille preue hit. And sir Gaheryse said he wold be aunysed. For kynge Mark was euer ful of treason, and there with al syr Gaheryse departed and rode his waye. And by the same waye that syre Kay shold ryde, he leyd hym doune to reste chargynge his squyer to wayte vpon sir kay, andwarne me whanne he cometh. Soo within a whyle sir kay came rydynge that waye, and thenne sir Gaheryse tooke his hors and met hym and sayd sir Kay ye are not wyse to ryde at the request of kynge Mark for he deleth alle with treason. Thenne said sire kay I requyre you late vs preue this adventure. I shal not sayle you said sir Gaherys, and soo they rode that tyme tyll a lake, that was that tyme called the peryllous lake. And there they abode vnder the shawe of the wood. The meane whyle kynge Marke within the castel of Tyntagyl auoyded alle his baro & alle other sauf suche as were pryuy with hym, were auoyded oute of his chamber. And thenne he lete calle his neuewe sir Andreid, and badde arme hym and horse hym lyghtely, & by that tyme it was mydnyght. And soo kynge Marke was armed in blak hors and alle, and soo att a pryuy posteme they two issuued oute with their varlets with them, and rode tylle they came to that lake. Thenne sir Kay aspyed them fyrst and gat his sperke, and profered to juste. And kynge Mark rode ageynst hym, and smote eche other ful hard, for the monke shone as the bryght day. And there at that justes sir Kayes hors fyll e doune, for his hors was not so bygge as the kynge hors and sir kayes hors brysed hym ful sore. Thenne aire Gaberys was wrothe that sir kay had a falle. Thenne he cryed knyght sytte thou fast in thy sadel, for I wille reuenge my felawe. Thenne kynge Marke was aferd of sir Gaberys, and so with euyl wyll e kynge Marke rode ageynst hym, and sir Gaberys gaf hym suche a stroke that he felle doune. So thenne forth with all syr Gaberyse ranne vnto syr Andred and smote hym from his hors quyte that his helme smote in the erthe, and nyhe had broken his neck. And there with al syr Gaberys alyghte and gate vp sir Kay. And thenne they yode bothe en foote to them, and badde them yelde them, and telle theire names other they shold dye. Thenne with grete payne aire Andred spak fyrst & said hit is kynge Marke of Cornewail, therfore be ye ware what ye do, and I am sir Andred his cosyn. Fy on you bothe said sir Gaberyse for a fals traitour, and fals treason hast thou wrouzt, and he both vnder the fayned chere that ye made vs, it were pyte said sir Gaberys that thou sholdest lye upe ony lenger. Saue my lyf said kynge Marke and I wil make amendys & consyder that I am a kynge anointyd, it were the more shame said sir Gaberys to saue thy lyf, thou arte a kynge enoynct with creme, and therfore thou sholdest holde with alle men of worship. And therfor thou arte worthy to dye.

With that he lashed at kynge Mark without sayeng ony more & ouerd hym with his shield and defended hym as he myghte, and thenne sir kay lashed at sir Andred, and there with all kynge Marke yielded hym vnto syr Gaberys. And thenne he kneled adoune, and made his othe vpon the crosse of the suerd that neuer whyle he lyned he wold be ageynst arraunt knyghtes. And also he swere to be good Frende vnto sir Tristram, yf euer he came in to Cornewail. By thenne sir Andred was on the erthe, and sir Kay wold haue slayne hym, lete be said sir Gaberys, slee hym not I pray you. It were pyte said syre kay that he shold lye upe ony lenger, for this is nygh coeysn vnto syr Tristram, and euer he hath ben a traytour vnto hym, & by hym he was exyled oute of Cornewaille, and therfor I will sée hym sayd sir Kay, ye shalle not sayd sir Gaherys sythen I haué gyuen the kyng his lyf. I pray you yeue hym his lyf. And there with alle sir Kay lete hym goo. And soo sir Kay and syre Gaherys rode their way vnto Dynas the Seneschal for by cause they herd say that he loued fel sir Tristram. Soo they repose them there, and soone after they rode vnto the royamme of Logrya. And soo within a lytel whyle they mette with sire Launcelot that alweyes had dame Bragwayn with hym, to that entente, he wende to haue mette the sooner with sir Tristram, and syr launcelot asked what tydynes in Cornewaille, and whether they herd of sir Tristram or not. Syr Kay and sir Gaherys ansuerd and said that they herd not of hym.
Thenne they told sir launcelot word by word of theire adventure.
Thenne syr launcelot smyled and said, hard hit is to take oute of the fleshe that is bred in the bone, and soo maade hem mery to gyders.

Capitulum xi.

Now leue we of this tale, and speke we of syr dynas that had within the castel a peramour, and she loued another knyghte better than hym. And so whanne syr Dynas wente oute on huntynge, she alipped doune by a tuell. And took with her two brachets, and soo she yede to the knyght that she loued, and he her ageyne. And whanne sir Dynas come home, and myst his peramour and his brachets themne was he the more wrother for his Brachets than for the lady.
Soo thenne he rode after the knyght that had his peramour and baddle hym torne and juste. So syr Dynas smote hym doune that with the faile he brake his legge and his arme. And thenne his lady and peramour cryed sire Dynas mercy, and said she wold loue hym better than ever she dyd. Nay said sir Dynas I shalle neuer truste them that ones hytrayed me, and therfor as ye haue begonne so ende, for I wyll neuer medle with you. And so sir Dynas departed and tooke his brachets with hym, and soo rode to his castel.

Now wil we torne vnto sir launcelot that was ryght heuy that he coude neuer here no tydynes of sir Tristram, for al this whyle he was in pryson with sir Darras, Palomydes, & Dynadan. Thenne dame Brangwayne took her leue to goo in to Cornewaile and syr launcelot, syr kay, & syr Gaherys rode to seke sir Tristram in the countrey of Surleuse. Now speketh this tale of sir tristram and of his two felawes, for every daye syre Palomydes brauled and sayd langage agraynst syr Tristram. I merueyle said sir Dynadan of the syr Palomydes, and thou haddest syre Tristram here, thou woldest do hym no harme. For and a wolf and a shepe were to gyders in a pryson, the wolf wold suffre the sheep to be in pees, and wete thou wel said sire Dynadan this same is sire Tristram a word, and now maist thou doo thy best with hym, & lete see now yf ye can skyfte it with your handes. thenne was sire Palomydes abashed and said lytyl. syr Palomydes thenne said sir Tristram, I haue herd moche of your maugre agraynst me, but I wille not medle with you as at this tyme by my wille, by cause I drede the lord of this place that hath vs in gouernance, for and I dredde hym not more than I doo the, sone hit shold be skyfte, soo they peaced them self. Ryght soo came in a damoysel and said knyghtes be of good chere for ye are sure of your lyues, and that I herd say my lord syre Darras. Thenne were they gladde alle thre. For dayly they wende they shold haue dyed.
Thenne soone after this syr Tristram fylle seke that he wende to haue dyed, thenne syr Dynadan wepte, and soo dyd sire Palomydes vnder them bothe makyngr grete sorou. Soo a damoysel came in to them and fonde them mornynge. Thenne she wente vnto sire Darras, and told hym how that myghty knyghte that bare the black sheldes was lykely to dye. That shalle not be sayd sir Darras, for god defende whanne Knyghtes come to me for socour that I shold suffre hem to dye within my pryson. Therfor said sir Darras to the damoysel, fetche that knyst and his felawes afore me. And thenne anone sir Darras sawe sir Tristram brough afort hym, he said sire Knyghte me repenteth of thy sekenesse, for thou arte called a ful noble knygth, and soo hit semeth by the. And wete ye wel it shall neuer be said that syr Darras shalle destroye suche a noble knygth as thou arte in pryson, how be hit, that thou hast slayn .iii. of my sones, where by I was gretely agreed. But now shalt thou goo and thy felawes, and youre harneis & horses haue ben fayre and clene kepte, and ye shall goo where hit lyketh you vpon this couenaunt, that thou Knyght wilt promyse me to be good frende to my sones two that ben now on lyue, and also that thou telle me thy name. Syr said he as for me my name is sir Tristram de Lyones, and in Cornewaile was I born and neuewe I am vnto Kynge Marke. And as for the deth of your sones I myght not doo with alle. For and they had been the next kyn y' I haue, I myzt haue done none other wyse. And yf I had slayne hem by treason or trechery I hadde ben worthy to haue dyed. Alle this I consyder said syr Darras, that alle that ye dyd was by force of kynghthode, and that was the cause I wold not putte you to deth. But sythe ye be syr Tristram the good knyght I pray you hertely to be my good frend and to my sones. Syr said sire Tristram I promyse yow by the feithe of my body euer whyle I lyue I wille do yow seruyse, for ye haue done to vs but as a natural Knyghte ought to doo. Thenne sire Tristram reposeyd hym there tyl that he was amended of his sekenesse. And whanne he was bygge and stronge, they took their leue, and euery knyght took their horses and soo departed and rode to gyders tyl they came to a crosse way. Now felawes said syr Tristram here wylle we departe in sondry wayes, and by cause sire Dynadan hadde the fyrst aduenture of hym I wille begynne.

Capitulum xii.

Soo as sire Dynadan rode by a welle, he fond a lady makyng grete dole. What eyleth you said sire Dynadan. Syre knyght saide the lady I am the wofullest lady of the world, for within these fyue dayes, here came a knyght called sire Breuse saunce pyte, and he slewe myn owne broder. And euer syns he hath kepte me at his owne will, and of al men in the world I hate hym moost. And therfor I requyre you of kynghthode to avenge me, for he wille not tary but be here anone. Lete hym come said sire Dynadan. And by cause of honour of alle wymmmyn I wylle doo my parte. With this cam syr Breuse. And whan he sawe a Knyght with his lady, he was wood wrothe. And thenne he said sire Knyght kepe the from me, soo they hurled to gyder as thonder, and eyster smote other passynge sore. But syre Dynadan putte hym thurgh the sholdeir a greuous wounde, and or euer sir Dynadan myght torne hym syr Breuse was gone and fledde. Thenne the lady prayd hym to brynge her to a Castel there besyde but four myle thens, and soo sir Dynadan brought her there, & she was welcome, for the lord of that castel was her vnkel, and soo syre Dynadan rode his way vpon his adventur.

Now torne we this tale vnto syre Tristram that by adventur he cam to a castel to ake lodgyng, wherin was quene Morgan le fay, & soo whan sire Tristram was let in to that castel, he had good chere alle that nyght. And vpon the morn whan he wold haue departed, the Quene said, wete ye wel ye shall not deparde lyghtely, for ye are here as a prysoner. Jhesu defende said syr Tristram, for I was but late a prysoner. Fayr knyght sayd the quene ye shalle abyde with me tyl that I wete what ye ar and from whens ye come. And euer the Quene wold set syr Tristram on her owne syde, and her peramour on the other syde. And euer Quene Morgan wold beholde syr Tristram, & ther at the knyght was jalous, and was in wilde sodenly to haue ronne vpon syr Tristram with a swerd, but he lefte it for shame, thene the quene said to sir Tristram telle me thy name & I shalle suffre you to deparde whan ye will. vpon that couenaunt I telle you my name is syr Tristram de lyones. A sayd Morgan le fay, and I had wyst that thou sholdest not haue departed soo soone as thou shalt. But sythn I haue maade a promyse, I wille holde hyt, with that thou wilt promyse me to bere vpon the a shelde that I shall deluyer the, vnto the castel of the hard roche where kynge Arthur hath cryed a grete turnement, and there I pray you that ye wille be, and to doo for me as moche deses of armes as ye maye doo. For att the Castel of maydens syr Tristram ye dyd meruellous deses of armes as euer I herd knyght doo. Madame said syr Tristram lete me see the shelle that I shalle bere. Thenne the shelle was brought forth, and the feld was gulyssh with a kynge and a quene therin paynted, and a knyght standynge aboue them vpon the kynge's hede, and the other vpon the quenes. Madame said sir Tristram this is a fayre sheld and a myzy. But what sygnefyth this kynge and this quene, and that knyght standynge vp bothe their hedes. I shalle telle you said Morgan le Fay hit sygneyeth kynge Arthur and quene gueneuer and a knyght that holdeth them both in bondage and in servage. Who is that knyght said syre Tristram, that shalle ye not wete as at this tyme, said the quene, but as the Frenshe book saith Quene Morgan loued sir launcelot best, and euer she desyred hym, and he wold neuer loue her, nor doo no thynge at her request, and therfore she held many Knyghtes to gyder, for to haue taken hym by strengthe. And by cause she demed that syr Launcelot loued Quene Gueneuer peramour, and she hym aseyne, therfore Quene Morgan le Fay ordeyned that sheld to put sir launcelot to a rebuke to that entent that kyng Arthur myght understande the loue bitwene them. Thenne sir Tristram took that sheld and promysed her to bere hit atte turnement at the castel of the hard roche. But sir Tristram knewe not that that sheld was ordeyned aseynst syr launcelot, but afterward he knewe hit.

Soo thenne sire Tristram took his leue of the Quene, and took the sheld with hym. Thenne came the knyzte that helde Quene Morgan le Fay, his name was syre Hymesone, and he made hym redy to folowe syre Tristram, sayr frende said Morgan ryde not after that knyght, for ye shalle not wynne no worship of hym. Fy on hym coward saide sire Hemyson, for I wyst neuer good knyghte come oute of Cornewaille, but yf hit were syr Tristram de Lyones. What & that be he said she. Nay nay said he, he is with la beale Isoud and this is but a daffyssh knyght. Allas my fair frende ye shalle fynde hym the best knyght that euer ye mette with alle. For I knowe hym better than ye doo, for your sake said sir Hemyson I shalle slee hym. A sayr frende said the Quene me repenteth that ye wylle folowe that knyght, for I fere me sore of youre aseyne comynge. With this, this knyghte rode his waye woode wrothe, and he rode after syr Tristram as fast as he hadde ben chaced with knyghtes. Whanne sir Tristram herd a knyghte come after hym soo fast, he retorned aboute, and sawe a knyzt comynge aseynst hym. And whanne he came nyghe to sir Tristram, he cryed on hyghe syr knyght kepe the from me. Thenne they rashed to gyders as hit had ben thonder, and sir Hemyson brysed his sperre vpon syr Tristram, but his harneis was sooo good that he myght not hurt he hym. And syre Trystram smote hym harder and bare hym thorou the body, and fylle ouer his hors croupe. Thenne sire Tristram torned to haue done more with his swerd, but he sawe sooo moche blood go from hym that hym semed he was lykely to dye. And so he departed from hym, and came to a fayre manoyre to an olde knyxt and there syre Tristram lodged.

Now leue to speke of sir Tristram, and speke we of the knyght that was wounded to the dethe. themne his varlet alyght and took of his helme, and thène he asked his lord whether there were ony lyf in hym, there is in me lyf sailde the knyghte but hit is but lytyl, and therfore lepe thou vp behynde me. Whan thou hast holpen me vp, and holde me fast that I falle not, and brynge me to Quene Morgan le fay, for depe drauztes of dethe drawen to my herte that I may not lyeue, for I wold fayne speke with her or I dyed. For els my soule wyll be in grete perylle and I dye, for with grete payne his varlet brought hym to the Castel, and there syr Hemyson fylle downe dede. Whanne Morgan le fay sawe hym dede, she made grete sorou oute of reason. And thenne she lete despoylle hym vnto his shyrt, and soo she lete hym putte in to a tomb. And aboute the tomb she lete wrynge, Here lyeth syr Hemyson slayne by the handes of sire Tristram de lyones. Now torne we vnto syre Tristram that asked the knyght his hoost yf he sawe late ony knyghtes aduenturous. Sir he said the last nyght here lodged with me Ector de marys and a damoytel with hym, and that damoytel told me that he was one of the best knyghtes of the world, that is not soo said sir Tristram, for I knowe four better knyghtes of his owene blood, and the fyrst is syr launcelot du lake, calle hym the best knyght, and sir Bors de ganys, Syr Bleoberys, syr Blamor de ganys and syr Gaheris. nay said his hoost, sir Gawayne is a better knyght than he, that is not soo said syr Tristram, for I haue mette with hem bothe, & I felte syr Gaherys for the better knyght and sir Lamorak I calle hym as good as ony of them, excepte sir launcelot. Why name ye not sir Tristram said his hoost, for I accompte hym as good as ony of them. I knowe not sire Tristram said tristram, thus they talked and bourded as longe as them lyste, and thenne wente to reste. And on the morne sir Tristram departed and took his leue of his host, and rode toward the roche deure, and none aduenture had sire Tristram but that, & soo he rested not tyl he came to the castel where he sawe fyue C tentys.

Capitulum xliii.

Thenne the kynge of Scottes and the kynge of Irland helde ageynst kynge Arthurs knyghtes, and there begann a grete medle. So came in syr Tristram and dyd merueillous dedes of armes, for there he smote doune many knyntes. And euer he was afore kynge Arthur with that sheld. And whanne kynge Arthur sawe that sheld, he merueyled greteely in what entente hit was made, but Quene Gueneuer demed as it was, wherfor she was hevy. Thene was ther a damoysel of Quene Morgan in a chamber by kynge Arthur, and whan she herd kynge Arthur speke of that sheld, thene she spak openly vnto kynge Arthur, syre kynge were ye wel this sheld was ordeyned for you to warne you of your shame and dishonour, and that longeth to you and your Quene. And thenne anone that damoysel pyked her awuy pryuely, that no man wysst where she was become. Thenne was kynge Arthur sadde and wrothe and asked from whens that damoysel, there was not one that knewe her, not wysst where she was become. Thenne Quene Gueneuer called to her sir Ector de marys, and there she made her complaynte to hym, and said I wote wel this sheld was made by Morgan le fay, in despyte of me and of sir Launcelot, wherfore I drede me sore lest I shold be destroyed. And euer the kynge bihelde syre Tristram that dyd soo merueillous dedes of armes that he wodred sore what knyght he myght be, and wel he wysst hit was not syr launcelot. And hit was told hym that syr Tristram was in petyte Bretayne with Isoud la blanche maynys, for he demyd and he had ben in the realme of Logryw, syr launcelot or somme of his felawes that were in the quest of syr Tristram that they shold haue fond hym or that tym. So kynge Arthur had merueyle what knyght he myghte be. And euer syr Arthurs eye was on that sheld. Alle that aspyed the Quene, and that made her sore aferd. Thenne euer syr Tristram smote doune knyghtes wonderly to beholde what vpon the ryght hand and vpon the lyfte hand that vnnethe no knyzt myght withstande hym. And the kyng of Scottes and the kyng of Irland beganne to withdrawe hem.
Whanne Arthur aspyed that, he thought that that Knyght with the strange sheld shold not escape hym. Thenne he called vnto hym syre Wwayne la blauche maynys, and bad hym arme hym and make hym redy. Soo anone kynge Arthur and sire Wwayne dressid them before sir Tristram and requyred hym to telle hem where he had that shelde. Syr he said I had it of Quene Morgan le fay sister vnto tyngle Arthur.

Soo here endeth this history of this book, for it is the firste book of sire Tristram de lgones, and the second book of sir tristram foloweth.
